

Scores Are Dead In A Fire Scare

Over 70 Killed at Christmas Tree in Calumet By a False Alarm.

violence to the rescuers for keeping them back from the long row of bodies.

There was not much work for the many doctors who hurried to the scene as soon as the alarm was spread, for those who were not killed in the first rush were held upright and safe by the very force of the on-rush towards the exit. Only three injured persons were taken to hospitals and a few went home with the assistance of friends.

The entertainment was set for the evening and the hall which is on the second floor, was soon filled to the limit. The choir sang Christmas selections, sang Christmas songs, and the man selected to play the part of Santa Claus had appeared in his gala dress to distribute the presents that were piled around the large, brightly lighted tree.

When the man cried "fire" Mrs. Caesar, of Larium, who was near the door, realized the danger instantly. She seized the man by the shoulder and tried to counteract the alarm but her efforts were useless. The man tore from her grasp and dashed away. The fatal word had reached the ears of many in the hall and it was repeated throughout the room.

Scattered Blocks Heavily.

"Fire" was shouted in many languages as fond parents rose and rushed forward to reach their children. Lives were crushed out in almost a twinkling. Policemen and firemen hurried to the building only to find the hallway blocked with bodies. Several officers climbed the fire escapes and entered the hall by the windows. In a short time the uninjured and those who had faintly been pulled from the tangle. The men began to pull the bodies of the dead and the helpless from the stairway and lay them in a row beside the building. This disposition of the crumpled bodies was found inadvisable because of the hysteria it caused among the spectators and the corpses were carried back into the hall as soon as it was emptied of the frightened persons. All the chairs were lined with bodies and other corpses had to be placed in the kitchen of the hall and beneath the stage.

Little Lives Snuffed Out.

The children even were seized with panic but the smaller ones, many not more than five years of age, were soon deprived of life under the heels of the larger persons who blindly or cases trod their own offspring to death.

One man was seen to stoop to pick up his little child. He was pushed violently from behind and he bore beneath him. A woman who attempted to lift up three small boys was crushed to death with the bodies.

One child about five years of age, was too greatly frightened to give her name, made her way to the street by way of the fire escape, and all others who were free had fled. She had been knocked down by the mad rush but no one had stepped on her as she was near the end of the line.

Actors On the Road Have Cheerless Christmas Day

to a cheerless, uninviting room or a tramp through the dark and stormy slushy streets to a sleeper for the next night," when that Pullman luxury has been provided and it usually is after the good business of a holiday, even with companies which are not accustomed to it as a frequent feature of their daily life, a bit of courage does not apply to the more important traveling organizations for the comfort of which everything possible is usually provided.

A great many companies do not play the week preceding Christmas, but some have been heard of which did not resume their labors on that day. Often times the "jump" on Christmas "stand" is a long one and entails spending most of the preceding 24 hours in travel. For instance, Mrs. Fluke, three years ago, after a week's rest in New York, played on Christmas day in Grand Rapids, Mich., but there was no particular hardship in this as there were fine train and hotel service, but she has played on the great holiday in some of the worst hotels and in some of the others, East Liverpool, Ohio. Any one who has ever visited the pottery city, can picture the "nightlights" of a Christmas "journey."

The Actor's Yearly Relief.

New York is the home of a large percentage of the actors of the stage, but a very small percentage of them ever has the good fortune to be playing on Christmas. The holiday on Christmas is a holiday away from home for almost all. This is a yearly grief to those who have homes and families there, and the number of those who do would doubtless be somewhat astonishing to the people whose opinions of professional domesticity are based on the comparatively isolated instances of infidelity that find their way into the Misses' lists.

As Christmas is the world's holiday, the day when the family tie, the tie between the actor and his home, is strengthened each year, and there is real pathos in the fact that seldom indeed is the actor enabled to spend with his family. That vast traveling public that moves ceaselessly to and from east and west, north and south, to the extent that makes our transportation facilities the wonder of the world, almost makes every effort to get home for Christmas, and the actor of the country over being almost deserted in consequence, but on the contrary the actor of the city, who has a home, his home. He alone of all the great throng is setting his face in the other direction.

Actors Deprived of Shopping.

When "on the road" the opportunities of the actor for shopping, and for the most part the theater-folk are more generous in the matter of gifts, are necessarily somewhat limited, while the remembrances that are sent to them are usually of the "traveling" variety, and the actor of the city, who is bringing them to the place of address after the company has departed. Through negligence or delay, they are not properly received, and the actor of the city, when finally received, looks like a postman of a holiday.

Probably no stage figure in America has known so many Christmas vicissitudes as Mrs. Fluke, who has been brought up in the theater, she has since she made her debut at the age of three, known to her father's company, and she has been a member of the company since she was a child. My Christmas dinner was served on a hotel tray on top of our
