

What Dame Fashion Is Offering

FULLY DESCRIBED BY OLIVETTE.

HERE is a charming tea gown of wistaria chiffon on the left. The kimono bodice has a V-shaped neck outlined in orchid nino, with a band of dark dyed squirrel at the back. This fur finishes the sleeves and outlines the tunic of silver lace, and also serves to tighten the hem.

The girle is of orchid satin held loosely in scarf lines, and this orchid satin serves as a foundation for the full chiffon skirt.

Behold a wonderful little dinner frock of rose liberty on the right. The bodice is a supple drape fichu of antique lace—V-shaped at the neck and with V-pointed angel sleeves. A drape of satin encircles the waist, which is confined under a butterfly bow of black velvet at the center front. From this belt falls a band of self-material finished in a tassel of silk and pearls.

The tunic is of gold tulle embroidered and beaded in pearls; this falls low over the skirt, which is draped under itself in the back. The satin is draped back in a deep slit at the bottom, but this may be modified to suit individual taste and modesty.

The Transvaal total was $6,000,000 below its 1912 record, and Australia showed a decreased production of $1,000,000. Mexico's production fell off about $5,000,000 as the result of the revolution there. Canada exceeded its output of 1912 by about $2,700,000, and British India showed an increase of $1,000,000.

His Timely Visit Adventures of a Grouch BY WALT MASON The Famous Prose Poet

"MY visit at this time seems providential," exclaimed the stranger. "You appear before me with your eye swollen and inflamed, and I have in my grip a quantity of Dr. Slippery's eye lotion, which is in constant use in all the royal households of Europe. Permit me, madam, to apply this lotion to the kind." "I won't do anything of the kind," said Mrs. Curfew. "It is true that the handle of a patent non-skidding meat grinder, which was sold to me by a disreputable agent, flew back and nearly knocked my eye out, and I have been in bed for several days, but rather than buy any of your lotion I would go down to my grave with my eye in a sling. I have made up my mind to have nothing more to do with agents in any way, shape or form, and said determination is like the laws of the Peder and the Merdians, or, I should say, the Merdians and the Pederians."

"Mr. Curfew was saying just this morning that if the agents would let us alone we'd be healthy, wealthy and wise, but, as it is, everything goes wrong, and I'm sure I don't see what the outcome will be. Last spring my husband attended a meeting which was addressed by a professor from the agricultural college, and said professor explained that the high cost of living might be reduced one-half if people would only exercise plain horse sense. Every family, he said, should keep a pig to eat up the potato peelings and scraps from the table and such things. He pointed out that American families waste more than they eat, and all the waste victuals go to the garbage can. A pig will thrive and grow into money on such waste victuals. In six months a pig will become a large and shapely hog, and then it can be killed, and the family will be supplied with lard and sausage and spare ribs, to say nothing of hams and shoulders which can be smoked for future use. Mr. Curfew came home from the meeting fairly enthusiastic over this scheme, and said he would go into the country first thing next morning and buy a young pig from some honest old farmer. "He started off on that errand in the morning, after taking from the clock 43 which I had been saving toward buying myself a bonnet fit to go to church in, and in the evening he came back with his pig, which he locked up in the barn. Then for weeks and weeks we fed that pig and it was astonishing how it grew. None of the crowned heads ever owned a more promising pig, and all summer I was thinking what a blessed thing it would be to have plenty of home grown lard in the house, for most of the lard you buy at the stores was intended for axle grease. "We petted and pampered that animal and Mr. Curfew practically lived out at the pig pen, he was so proud of the critter. Finally we decided to kill the pig just before Thanksgiving, and we invited 10 or 15 friends and neighbors to come to dinner on that day. We intended having a sausage dinner, turkeys being so common. About three days before Thanksgiving, when I was down town trying to buy a pumpkin to make some pick, an agent called here and talked Mr. Curfew into buying a package of Prof. Spideworthy's great animal renovator, which is composed of healing herbs and barks and buds. He said that if his renovator were fed to our pig, the animal would gain in weight 20 pounds a day, and when it was killed it would have a flavor like ambrosia, and he talked so well that my husband bought a package; and that evening he mixed a heaping tablespoonful in the swill without saying a word to me. "I went out next morning to give the pig his breakfast and found the unfortunate animal deader than Julius Caesar ever was. I went to the house looking for Mr. Curfew, but he had taken the shotgun and was away looking for that agent, but all in vain. He came home at night broken hearted and weeping like a child, and worked until midnight digging a grave for the pig, and he has never been the same man since. So we have registered a vow never to buy anything more from agents, and the sooner you disperse the better."
