"A Man and His Wife"

John Wants Isabel to Discharge Cynthia. Spend Money.

CHAPTER XX. THE day after Mrs. Simmons' party Isabel Hamilton took her evening dress out to be cleaned. The young woman in charge of the cleaning and drying establishment promised to have the gown satisfactorily renovated within ten days. It would cost two and a half dollars.

"It's a bit hard on John," Isabel reflected, "but he offered to pay for the damage. Now I will get new evening gloves."

"I'll go to the store and get the long gloves. She winked as she learned the price. They were four dollars and twenty-five cents a pair. She bought them at a shop at which John had allowed her to open an account.

"I was sweet of you, dear, to offer to pay for cleaning my light blue gown," Isabel said to John. "I may as well give it to you now, so that you will have it when the dress comes in."

"I'll give it to you now, so that you will have it when the dress comes in."

"I'll give it to you now, so that you will have it when the dress comes in."
