KNOCKOUTS IN THE PRIZE RING

Two Men Left Helpless in an Event Told of by Ex-Referee Smith.

The very first round these terrific punches started knocking each other down.

It was a mighty difficult task to keep tab on the times that the men were on the floor. First one and then the other was stretched out, but as game as fighting chickens they came back for more.

The fight lasted into the fourth round and during that time there were at least 20 times when the referee started a count on one or the other. They were fairly evenly divided until the latter part of the fourth round, when Evans began to get a big lead.

He tapped Thome four or five times and was just going in to finish his strenuous fight, crowded into a brief Evans' solar plexus that sent the latter down.

Both Completely Gone.

Just at that interesting period the bell sounded and Evans was carried to his corner. Thome just managed to totter to his chair and his seconds worked over him desperately. Evans appeared to be all right in the 24th round, but just as the bell sounded for the fifth round the towel was thrown into the ring.

Thome had risen from his chair, barely able to stand and supported by the outstretched arm of a second. It didn't seem possible that he could have taken two weeks toward the center of the ring to continue the battle without falling on his face, so completely spent was he. But he was awarded the decision, just the same.

Thome now is a member of the Chicago fire department and doesn't do any more boxing. He had ten years of strenuous fighting crowded into a brief career of less than ten months. Is it any wonder he quit?
