at Chihuahua City, who will deliver it to the leaders of the factions with which they are accredited.

The message is "a statement to the American people" but is prepared as a warning to the Mexican chiefs and goes to Villa, Carranza, Zapata, and Gonzalez Garza.

White house officials refused to amplify the president's statement, saying that any further steps in his new policy would be announced as they were decided upon.

Later today president Wilson conferred with Miss Mabel Boardman of the executive committee of the Red Cross on relief for the famine sufferers.

Secretary Bryan announced the receipt of the dispatch from the Mexican Red Cross, emphasizing the great need in Mexico City. Other appeals to local Red Cross committees throughout the country will be issued soon to expedite the gathering of supplies at the border.

MEXICANS SURPRISED AT TERSENESS OF THE NOTE

President Wilson's note on the Mexican situation was received with considerable surprise by Mexicans on the border when it was given publicity Wednesday in an extra Herald; the note was expected to be more lengthy and more emphatic.

Though supporters of each faction expressed the opinion that their leader was the stronger, many of the leaders said that conditions in their respective territories were good, the principal point of interest was the statement in the note that, unless the factions got together "within a very short time," action will be taken by the American government.

The opinion most frequently expressed was that the domestic affairs of Mexico were "none of the United States' business." For this reason few would express an opinion regarding the probability of a general conference, similar to that held at Aguascalientes, being held.

A Villa View. Francisco McManus Villa consul at El Paso, made the following statement: "I do not recognize the right of the United States to interfere in the domestic affairs of Mexico, I have no intention of spending time to make regarding the Wilson note. I added, however, that foreigners and Mexicans alike, who have gone about their legitimate business in territory controlled by Gen. Villa have received protection."

As is the custom, the university government mailed to Mr. Martinez a check for $50, the customary honorarium for the commencement orator.

COCOANUT OIL FINE FOR WASHING HAIR

If you want to keep your hair in good condition, the less soap you use the better. Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle and is very harmful. Just plain unperfumed coconut oil (which is pure and entirely greaseless), is much better than soap or anything else you can use for shampooing, as this can't possibly injure the hair.

respirators, or "muzzles," adopted by the British as an antidote have failed to prove effective, according to a non-commissioned officer in the British army who writes his uncle, Rev. A. Logan George, of Toronto, as follows:

Large advertisement for Medical Milk Commission: "The herd is composed of selected cows, tuberculin tested twice yearly and inspected twice a month by a competent Veterinarian appointed by our Commission. These cows are kept under sanitary conditions in a separate enclosure; they are groomed before each milking and their udders washed and dried with a sterile towel; they are admitted to the milking rooms through a fly chute which is so constructed as to remove the flies from them before they enter the milking rooms, thereby removing one of the great dangers and usual sources of milk contamination. The milking rooms have cemented walls and floor, and are flushed out before and after each milking. The windows of this building are fast and cannot be opened, and the ventilation is through a ventilator through the roof, which is closed on windy days. This precaution very much reduces the possibility of contamination through dust. The milk is drawn into pails with small openings, by men whose personal health and hygiene is guaranteed. The pails were clean, white, bucked, and caps and are required to scrub the hands and clean their nails before milking. The milk after being drawn is poured into a strainer, passes through layers of sterile absorbent cotton and gauze and into the bottling room, where it is bottled by a man whose health and hygiene is guaranteed. The bottles and milking utensils are steam sterilized and a sterile cap is sealed on the bottle, with the date of its production and seal of the Milk Commission stamped on the cap; the bottles are placed in ice, the milk rapidly cooled to 45 degrees, and the bottles are kept on ice until the milk is delivered to the consumer. It is analyzed by a chemist and examined by a bacteriologist twice a week, who is selected by our Medical Milk Commission. The bacteriological records for the months of January, February, March and April, 1915, show an average of 1,328 to the cubic centimeter; and, since the maximum count permitted by our Medical Milk Commission for certification is 10,000 to the cubic centimeter, we feel that the purity of this milk can be congratulated on this excellent showing in the production of certified milk. The cost of producing milk under such rigid rules and regulations is necessarily high and the price asked by the producer here is not out of proportion to the price of certified milk in other cities—being about double that of ordinary dairy milk. The Medical Milk Commission gives its services to the work without remuneration, other than the satisfaction in obtaining a pure, clean food essential for the health and life of sick babies and delicate children. THE EL PASO COUNTY MEDICAL SOCIETY."
