Republican Convention Getting Close to Selecting Candidate.

The sun came out for the first time in four days. He was speaking of a Republican party with its face turned to the future.

"And as an omen of that," said he, "the sun is shining, thank God!"

The Burton demonstration began when Gov. Willis closed his speech at 1:15 o'clock. The Ohio delegation, seated directly in front of the platform, rose to a man, waving flags.

Lodge Speaks for Weeks. California and Colorado passed, and Connecticut yielded to Massachusetts. When order was restored and senator Lodge took the platform to nominate senator Weeks.

Senator Sutherland rebuffed senator Harding of the gavel while senator Lodge spoke.

At 2:30 senator Lodge finished and the Weeks demonstration began.

Da Post Pleased in Nomination. In two minutes it subsided, the gavel fell, the roll call was resumed and Delaware being reached, representative T. W. Miller took the platform to nominate Coleman Da Post.

Congressman Miller drew a brief sketch of his candidate's career as mine laborer, superintendent in Kentucky and his later interests in civil and industrial conditions in mining camps.

"At the outbreak of the great war in Europe," he continued, "he separated himself entirely from the powder business. Since that date he has erected another monument in New York City to his constructive genius, the largest building in the world."

What Da Post is Like. "He has the domesticity and kindness of William McKinley, the energy and explosive force of Theodore Roosevelt, and the calm, deliberate judgment of William Howard Taft."

He recommended him as a business man's candidate.

"As a representative of the working-man he is an ideal candidate, he added; "he, too, has been a toiler—not a spoiler."

Sherman's Name Proposed. William J. Calhoun, of Chicago, former United States minister to China, in a few words, placed senator Lawrence F. Sherman, of Indiana, in nomination before the Republican convention, upon the authority of the Illinois delegation, instructed by the state organization.

"His early life was that of the son of a pioneer farmer," he said. "His opportunities for education were few, yet his desire was intense. He studied and entered upon the practice of law."

"Later he entered the state legislature and was twice elected United States senator, once by the legislature, once by direct vote."

"His life story is simply the story of a man of plausibility and simple living, but a man of courage, of clear intellect and high resolve," he concluded.

Then Came Patechaska. After 24 minutes of shouting for

BORAH PLEADS FOR HARMONY

Progressives Cheer Republican Leader Who Speaks Well of Roosevelt.

with the conference until a final report could be made.

Johnson Explains. Governor Johnson was called to the platform. "The sum total of the case," he said, "was that the Progressives made the issue of this campaign."

"The Republicans accept the issue and admit they have no man to suggest except Theodore Roosevelt."

Another tremendous burst of applause followed.

Ready For a Nomination. The convention laughed derisively when Henry J. Allen said 800 of the Republican delegates at the Coliseum were holding a demonstration for former president Taft while the galleries there were laughing. The chairman stated that "at any minute" the delegates might be glad to be in their seats, indicating that if new came from the Republican convention of a nomination the Progressive convention might be expected to proceed instantly to nominate Col. Roosevelt.

Navy Plank Upheld. When the platform was taken up again the navy plank had been approved as originally drawn, despite attempts to amend by having a plank for a "sufficient force for naval defence" instead of "a navy restored to at least second rank in battle efficiency," as the resolutions committee recommended.

Keep Up With Republicans. When the leaders got time to breathe again, they conferred on the course to be followed by the convention and decided to be regulated by the action of the Republicans. Frequent bulletins were telephoned to the Auditorium stage by a Progressive representative at the Coliseum so that the Progressive leaders always were abreast of the action of the Republicans.

Leaders Are Laying Plans. Several Progressive leaders, including Mr. Perkins, Gov. Johnson, James R. Garfield and Henry Allen withdrew to a private room in the lower part of the convention hall while the platform reading was in progress to discuss a plan in case the Republican convention did not nominate. They understood that the Republican convention would adjourn immediately after two ballots had been taken on the presidential nominee, provided there was no nomination at that time.

Borah Visits Progressives. Without any preliminary announcement, senator William E. Borah entered the Auditorium Hall at 12:40, where the Progressives were assembled in convention. He was escorted to the platform. A tremendous ovation was given him.

Chairman Robins introduced senator Borah and the convention roared itself

L. A. WRIGHT IS DADLY BURIED

Explosion Gasoline Dangerously Injures Cleaner; Fire Consumes Clothing.

L. A. Wright, proprietor of a cleaning works at 415 East Overland street, was seriously burned on his face and body when a quantity of gasoline used for cleaning exploded Friday afternoon at 1:30 o'clock and set fire to the establishment. Mr. Wright was taken to the emergency hospital and later to Hotel Bilen. His injuries are said to be dangerous.

The central fire department, called to the fire, reported that no cause was apparent for the fire, unless it could have been friction. The building and its contents, including a large quantity of clothing, probably will be a total loss.

When the senator said he had not come officially, "I will say to you frankly," were his first words, "I came over here to get an inspiration."

Borah the Compromise? At once a wave swept over the hall, started, no one knew how, suggesting that stranger events than harmony with Borah as the man to unite the parties, might happen. This thought grew as the senator in his speech introduced the magic name "Theodore Roosevelt" as the Progressive's great leader.

"We want Teddy," resounded through the hall and galleries with more vim than at any time since the convention assembled. It was not "caused enthusiasm," or if it was, the can had burst.

Pleas For Harmony. Senator Borah waited quietly and finally chairman Robins urged quiet.

"It is well known—the deep seated affection I have for your leader," he said, "was heightened by another salvo of enthusiasm, the whole convention in a mighty chant, shouting 'We want Teddy' for a full minute, while Borah smilingly waited."

The shouting lulled and then was renewed, leaders on the stage joining.

"There's no doubt you want 'Teddy,'" said senator Borah. "We want Borah, too," answered the delegates and the senator proceeded, swinging into the stride of his speech, which he promised would be brief.

Pats Quietus On Rumor. He put a quietus on the whispered circulation of his name as a possible "Moses" by reminding the Progressive convention that he was present as a member of a committee from "another convention."

"There isn't a doubt but that you want Teddy and that millions of citizens throughout the country also want Teddy," he began. "You are fortunate in having a leader," he continued, "who has done more than any other man to make the issues of this campaign. He is a maker of questions involved in this international crisis. The convention responded enthusiastically to the praise of the colonel."

"But let us be in mind," he urged, "what these two conventions do here will perhaps decide the welfare of the United States for the next quarter of a century. We can only insure ourselves by working together in close cooperation. I do not discourage your loyalty and enthusiasm to your leader, but I must say it is essential that before we leave this great city it should be definitely determined that we will march and fight together in this great conflict."

"But if the two conventions agree upon your great leader you will find no more enthusiastic supporters than myself."

Borah concluded amid applause and shouts of Roosevelt and Borah.

As Borah shook hands with the leaders on the stage and left, the floor hummed with excited discussion of the dramatic development.

Insistent demands were made upon Progressive leaders by some of the "radical" element during the recess that the Progressive convention nominate Col. Roosevelt before senator Fall nominated him in the Republican convention. It was insisted that such a move would add strength to Fall's remarks.

"I think the colonel will be nominated in the Republican convention first," secretary McGrath said.

Progressives Recess. After finishing consideration of their platform, section by section, but without voting for its final adoption, the Progressive convention recessed for lunch at 1:35 p. m. until 3 p. m.
