Carpenter Divorce Case Reopened

Marguerite Paul Carpenter, of Boston, from whom Maj. Ralph G. Carpenter, of Wolfboro, was granted a divorce on July 11, by Judge John Kivel of the New Hampshire superior court at Concord, has asked for a withdrawal of that decree, pending a rehearing of the case.

She Asks for Argument of the Question of adultery upon which the divorce decree was based, for an original argument of the questions of concubinage and adultery and condonation of cruelty and for leave to file an appropriate motion for review by the supreme court.

After Informally Granting the Decree

Judge Kivel suspended its execution, giving Mrs. Carpenter's counsel thirty days to file their appeal.

Wife Killed; Hotel Man Arrested

With his wife lying dead at the Rutland, Vt., hospital from a gunshot wound George W. Duncan, lessee of the Holland hotel on Merchants Row, of that city, is a prisoner there charged with murder.

The Shooting Occurred at the Home of Edward Dezero, 148 Liberty avenue, whose wife is Mrs. Duncan's niece. Duncan is said to have fired four shots at his wife from point blank range, one taking effect in the abdomen near the left groin and the others going wild. Jealousy is given as the cause.

RHODE ISLAND METALL FRIENDS

Officers and Men Follow French System in Camp; Discipline Excellent.

The First Squadron of Rhode Island cavalry, in Camp Pershing, has brotherly companionship between officers and enlisted men that is unexcelled in any other militia camp. Notwithstanding this little familiarity the officers have absolute command over their men. There is orderliness and system in this camp. All the men are "pals" after the French system.

"If there is an enlisted cavalryman on the only horse in camp and an officer desires to ride that horse, he jumps aboard and off they go, enlisted man and his superior on one horse," said a cavalryman of the Rhode Island squadron. And the cavalryman's explanation was borne out when an officer, in fun, was seen to climb on a horse that one of the border patrol guards was riding to duty at the point of the El Paso border near Washington park.

Name Avenue

As an evidence of friendly relations that exist between officers and enlisted men all the avenues (they are not called streets, for every city roadway in Rhode Island is an avenue) have been named after captains and different troops, and the main street, "Richards avenue," is named after Maj. John J. Richards, in command of the Rhode Island cavalry.

The main street of the Rhode Island cavalry camp, will be held Wednesday night with fitting ceremonies. There will be boxing, wrestling and a general good time for every man of the camp. Pvt. Sidney Sullivan, B troop, is in charge of the arrangements.

Men Want Discharge

Beneath the surface there is said to be a little discontent. There are several men in the Rhode Island cavalry who have dependent relatives and they want a discharge. They are getting the discharge and hence there is some ill feeling. It is reported that state officials are visiting the dependent families of military men.

Three Boys and a Man were Drowned

Sunday. Three of them occurred in the Delaware river in the Bridesford section, and the other in the Manayunk canal. The man, though a strong swimmer, lost his life through an attack of infantile paralysis in Philadelphia, a disease which is becoming more widespread every day. The health authorities today will issue an order closing all motion picture shows to children. This is purely a precautionary measure that is designed to keep the children as much apart as possible. Director Kruesen believes that this mild quarantine will show beneficial results ultimately.

Marine Corps Has "Princess Pat"

The "Princess Pat" of the marine corps is the sobriquet that has been applied to Miss Natalie Sellers Barnes, a young society woman of Bryn Mawr, at Camp Detrick. Furthermore, there are two companies of rookies that are familiarly known as the "Princess Own." Like "Princess Pat," of Congress, who recruited the British army, Miss Barnes personally recruited her two companies of reserves.

Yesterday the young woman came all the way from Plattsburg, N. Y., in order to review her troops at the Lane-down training camp. She was particularly anxious to see what progress they had made under the competent instruction of marine officers. PHILADELPHIA MAN HAS MONSTER MAN EATER AS TROPHY OF EXCITING BATTLE.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Aug. 7.—"It was a fight to a finish between the shark and me," thus Harry Long, 47 years old, of 1228 South Hazel street, explained how he captured and brought a five foot shark near the Reed street wharf late Saturday afternoon. "She was between the wharf and me and one of us had to get hurt seriously," he added, whimsically.

The shark hangs from the door of a shed in the man's yard. It measures five feet and one inch, exactly the height of its captor, from the tip of its glistening tail to the tip of the vicious-looking head. It weighs almost 175 pounds.

According to Long's story, he was swimming off the wharf with several companions, but was first noticed when he appeared to be a corpse floating down the river, a dozen feet from the shore. A closer inspection revealed a shark floating on its side and apparently dead. Suddenly it moved and the swimmer felt that he was being seized. He turned to turn his back on the big fish and swim for shore, he seized a floating hoop, threw it over his head and started to swim. He turned his head and saw the shark's light his way to shore, calling for help. The shark endeavored time and time again to turn on its back and snap its jaws at the swimmer.
