CROOKS CAUGHT; LEAGUE INFORMED

Fraud Attempted in Early Days of Baseball Leads to National League.

(Continued from page 15.) the way the proposition was worded meant that no reply from my players to whom the messages were addressed meant that they would enter the plot and would throw the game to the Louisville club.

Woods Kept Quiet

Well, I tucked those messages in my pocket and never said a word to any of the players. When the Louisville team arrived, I kept my players under cover. I didn't want that Hall-Devlin-Craver crowd to meet my boys and to discover that the message never had been delivered.

Gamblers Bet Heavily

Assuming that the game was fixed, the gamblers went ahead and bet every dollar they could muster on Louisville to win—and Louisville was beaten.

Chicago Played Fairly

And to the credit of the playing of my Chicago team that afternoon, as the most perfect I have ever seen any club perform. Those boys played beyond the average.

Wood Dropped Out

My own baseball career ended with the close of the season of 1875. During 1874 I had lost a limb due to blood poisoning following a canoe fish.

Formed The National League

"It is not powerful enough and its scope is too limited," said Hulbert. "A new ruling body is needed—one with absolute authority; one which can stamp out dishonesty and gambling in baseball."

Hulbert Avoided Presidency

Hulbert was the unanimous selection for the presidency of the league. All he needed to do was to indicate his willingness to hold the office.
