

PROHIBITION BEFORE HOUSE

Senate Resolution Refers National Prohibition To Vote of the States.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 2.—The fate of the senate resolution providing for a nationwide prohibition amendment to the constitution today rests with the house.

The resolution passed the senate yesterday by a vote of 85 to 26, eight more than the necessary two-thirds and today "dry" leaders pressed for its prompt consideration there.

The only change made in the resolution as originally reported to the senate was the addition of an amendment providing that the constitutional amendment should be operative unless ratified by three-fourths of the states within six years from the date of its submission.

The proposed constitutional amendment is the first initiated by congress since that providing for popular election of United States senators, approved in 1912.

As adopted, the resolution, which was submitted by senator Albert Shoop, of Texas, Democrat, would add the following article to the federal constitution:

"The manufacture, sale or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, or the exportation thereof from, the United States, and all territories subject to the jurisdiction thereof, for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

"This article shall be operative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the constitution by the legislatures of the several states, as provided in this constitution, within six years from the date of the submission thereof to the states by the congress.

"The congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

House prohibitionists expressed fear today that owing to the recent decision of the Democratic caucus to consider only war legislation at this session they would be unable to bring the resolution to a vote. Every effort was to be made to convene another caucus to reconsider the decision.

With a caucus that only a personal appeal from president Wilson for house action on the resolution would ensure the success to reverse itself. This was not expected.

That the Texas ranges in the Panhandle are slowly burning up on account of the hot and windy weather, broken only by a few local showers two weeks ago is clearly evidenced by the number of mixed shipments and "thin" cows which are being dumped on the markets while there is yet a chance of realizing a return for them, cattlemen here say.

Many cattlemen have shipped to New Mexico where the pastures have been in better condition and the weather conditions more favorable. There are many others who would ship, if their cattle could stand the transportation, said a cattlemen.
