PRISONERS KILLED FOR REFUSING TO MAKE UNIFORMS FOR GERMANS

Even the German Workmen at Krupp's Rebel Against Treatment of Their Overseers and the Starvation Enforced Upon Them; Are Shot or Sent to the Army; Prisoners Are Treated as Slaves; Murdered.

(Continued from page 1.) I assured that I shall say nothing. I only wish that I was out of Essen and back to my own country. "You may be seen," he answered. "We're not going to stand this for you."

I purposely delayed putting the machine in running order in the hope that I should gain more knowledge from the man, and was rewarded by learning that the Saxon had become a member of a Socialist union which had been formed secretly. This man, I learned, was not only a member of the union, but he had attended secret meetings of the union in the dead of night.

Horrible Fates. None of the persons who were punished for participation in the union propaganda were able to see their families. What happened to the women I cannot tell; their fate was too horrible. Today they are in the hands of the Germans, and are not a few, rather than face the awful future, took their lives. As for the men, their fate was even more horrible. Those who were in the hands of the Germans...

Between armed guards they were marched through the streets, the objects of ridicule. They were taken to the workhouse, and there they were kept in the roadways, but as they fell, the soldiers, without showing the least sign of pity or sympathy, were ordered to pick them up and being left to rot at the half unconscious forms of those who had fallen until they were buried.

Belgium Battered. Such demonstrations of brutality were allowed to pass unnoted by the officers in charge, and the people in the streets appeared rather to enjoy the "sport" of seeing the Belgians battered in the hands of their oppressors. Once inside the works' estate, they were marched to the large wooden and concrete buildings which were used as barracks for the prisoners.

A Hero's Death. We to the man who refused to work. He was taken to the punishment quarters, a special place set apart for those who refused to work. He was there for several days, and during that time he was starved and beaten. He died of starvation and exhaustion.

As a further punishment this man was made to stand for a day and night at rigid attention. During the whole time not a morsel of food was given him. When he fell from sheer exhaustion he was maltreated by the soldiers who were guarding him until he struggled to his feet again. It was more than human nature could stand.

Prodded at with rifle butts and with bayonets the moment the rigid attitude was departed from. Literally starving from want of food, the man fell. Fred him as they would, the guards could not raise him. The Belgian slave had died defying the Germans. He had kept his word, and in my eyes, he died a hero's death. The man's death was not by any means the only one which occurred amongst the slaves. In all parts of... all enlistments in the regular army, national guard, navy, marine corps, federal reserve corps, and national guard reserves. The ratio for the country at large is 64.7 enlistments to every 100 of draft quota. This represents the median line of patriotic enthusiasm. In states where the ratio is higher, a super-normal eagerness to fight the Kaiser is indicated; in states showing a lower ratio there has been, for one reason or another, a comparative lack of the kind of enthusiasm that takes men to the recruiting office.

By the provisions of the selective service law the several states are not credited as their respective draft quotas with enlistment in the navy, service, the marine corps, the federal reserve corps, or the national guard reserves, but only with the numbers of men who entered the regular army of the United States as members of the national guard on April 1, 1917, or who entered the regular army or national guard between April 1 and June 30, 1917. The ratio of these "statutory enlistments," as they may be called, to the total number of men in the United States is a whole.

The voluntary enlistments include the works the men were refusing to perform the tasks to which they had been put, and the most brutal methods were adopted to force them to work.

At the Mercy of Brutes. It was the rule that forced laborers should be employed, at the very least, in the office of the provost marshal general. It was the rule that the provost marshal general should be entitled to the distinction. For Oregon contributed up to December 13, 1917, 153 voluntary enlistments to the military and naval forces of the United States to every 100 of her draft quota—a larger ratio than can be shown by any other state.

The provost marshal general's office has prepared what may be called a "thermometer of patriotism," which shows as of December 13, 1917, the ratio of voluntary enlistments to draft quota in each of the states, as well as in the United States as a whole.

GERMAN RAIDING PARTY IS DRIVEN OFF BY BRITISH. London, Eng., Feb. 12.—A hostile raiding party attacked one of our posts last night northeast of Epeby, but was driven off by our fire. The war office reports: "Yesterday evening Manchester troops successfully raided German trenches west of La. Many casualties were inflicted on the enemy at slight cost to ourselves and seven prisoners and a machine gun were captured."

OPHELIA. Unable to tolerate the brutality, the Belgian dared to retort, calling the foreman a Hun. The German struck him on the head with a steel tool, killing him instantly. There was no inquiry into the affair. A Belgian had "died" in the shop, and that was all.

Another practice which was very common in the shops was for the German workmen to bribe the foreman to allow them time off, or to credit them with working longer hours than they had actually put in. It was here that the Belgian workmen came in. They were especially those who were skilled. The German drillers were paid one mark per hour, so if a man wanted time off, he made an arrangement with the foreman, and a Belgian slave was made to work several hours extra to make up for the German's hours away.

Punished. One Belgian refused to work for the foreman. This only served to arouse still further the German's passion. Speechless with rage he rushed at the Belgian, who, to defend himself, planted his fist under the foreman's jaw, knocking him down.

Then, seeing what he had done, the Belgian turned in terror, realising the fate which would be meted out to him. He had run a few yards when he was felled with a blow from behind and seized by the guards. These men took a delight in dragging him towards the foreman, who ordered the Belgians to stand at attention before him.

Then, at a signal, the guards handcuffed the man with his hands behind his back, and when he was thus securely fastened the foreman took his revenge. Slowly and deliberately he removed his coat, rolled up his sleeves to the elbow, and commenced to pummel the Belgian. With the first blow he knocked him down. Instantly the guards pulled him to his feet and propped him up. Again he fell, and once again the performance was repeated. So it went on till the Belgian could no longer stand. Blood was streaming from his face, which the brutal German had pounded with his fists until he was tired. Then he ordered the guards to take him away for punishment.

The Belgian never returned to the workshop, for when they got him into the punishment cell it was found that the life had been beaten out of him. Copyright, 1918, by Theo. Van de Lind.

THE WAR AT A GLANCE

ANNOUNCEMENT by president Wilson of America's purpose to emancipate the world from the threat and attempted mastery of selfish groups of autocratic rulers comes at almost the same time that the German emperor, exulting over the collapse of opposition on the eastern front, exclaims that peace will come "but victory of German arms must be recognized."

In reiterating the intention of the American people to continue the war until a new international order devoid of government by intrigue and force is realized, the president answered the statements made recently by Chancellor von Hertling for Germany and foreign minister Cerain for Austria-Hungary. The president said, "The German emperor's reply to congratulations on the peace agreement with the Ukraine glorifies the policy of might over right, and he says, 'I shall seek in every way to bring peace to the German people, but I shall be forced to have peace,' while acknowledging the power of the German sword."

OUR LINE OF DEFENSE. It is a moment of tense nerves—ready to slip out of the trench at the word of command—and at the enemy. Our men on the firing line are physically fit for military service because only the fittest are allowed to go to the front to endure the hardships of this fearful war. But we must not be content with 30 per cent of the physical health of our American youth. We cannot afford to lose four men out of five because of physical weakness. Such weaknesses can be cured. Many times the kidneys are to blame.

FREE THE GLASS ALSAUCE TO BE MOST BEFIT ALWAYS FRENCH

Question of Alsace-Lorraine Is One for the World, One of Right. Will Never Be Surrendered to Germans; An International Question.

By M. ALBERT THOMAS, The Great French Socialist Leader and Ex-Minister of Munitions. Paris, France, Feb. 12.—Alsace-Lorraine must be restored to France as one of the conditions of peace at the conclusion of this war. This is the demand of the Socialists of France and of all French people. I am speaking now solely for the Socialists, however.

What the French Socialists Say. The right of France to Alsace-Lorraine remains unaltered: it was in violation of the right of peoples to self-determination that Alsace-Lorraine was snatched from France by the treaty of Frankfurt, to which France had to submit, has been torn to pieces by Germany's own hand. The document by which Alsace-Lorraine was surrendered to Germany has now been destroyed; the right of Alsace-Lorraine must come back to France. But French Socialists further add (and this is the point) that the right (friends) that France, acting of her own free will, will do herself honor by going so far, in her regard for the right of peoples to self-determination, as to agree, after Alsace-Lorraine has resumed her place in the French community, under the control of the league of nations. What is proposed here is not a concession, it is a demand. It is a demand that Alsace-Lorraine be returned to France or not, but a constitutional act after the event, by which the inhabitants of Alsace-Lorraine will declare if they wish to be French again.

Why do France and Alsatians, in this special case of Alsace-Lorraine, think that no plebiscite should take place in spite of their claim for the people of the right to dispose of themselves? The reason is a simple one. The question is not to give a population the right for the first time to decide for itself, but to give it the right to decide for itself. The most characteristic feature of the French Republic is its complete unity, and the fact that all the populations of France have unquestionably expressed their desire to belong to the French community. No people in the world has attained to such absolute unity, such a homogeneous sentiment, as the French people. While Great Britain shows to the world the finest realization of the imperial idea, France is the very example and prototype of the nation.

In 1793, after the alternative changes which had ruled in Alsace, the French, now French, now German territories, the Lorrainers and the Alsations, on the great day of the revolution, solemnly declared their resolution to be part of the French nation. At Strasbourg, Mulhouse and in the provinces of Alsace-Lorraine, the people showed by stirring demonstrations how enthusiastically they proclaimed the French nation. The declaration of 18th century, no separate tendency ever found any expression in Alsace or in Lorraine. In 1871, when the two provinces were annexed to France, the inhabitants raised before the Bordeaux assembly a moving protest, in which they declared that they should even continue to pass their rights to be French would remain indefeasible. In 1874, they protested in...

Supposing France wanted to annex part of Germany, would the British people agree? It is possible to show that the British people would not agree. It is not merely a French question; it is an international question, in which the maintenance of the peace of Europe is at stake.
