Great Human Fact About Peace Settlement Is Setting Free Of Forty Million Europeans

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 6.—In the six months which have followed the signing of the treaty of Versailles and the publication of the terms, political disputes in America and political events in Europe have served to turn attention and discussion from the document itself, that it is perhaps worth while to return afresh to the basis of settlement, which is more often discussed now, in detail, than viewed with any historical perspective at a whole.

There is in the United States, the entire discussion has centered about the league of nations, a circumstance of the peace settlement which, for the great nations of Europe, for France, Britain, and Italy, was relatively unimportant, while in Great Britain the attack has been upon provisions affecting British allies, which, to say the least, are not open to criticism from other sections extremely profitable to the British themselves.

All Nations Disappointed. We may say, with fair accuracy, that the treaty was a disappointment to all the nations who fought together against Germany, but for very diverse reasons. For the French, the treaty was a small return for their great losses and sacrifices, for the British, something for which they had given up a measure of their old isolation, having disposed of their empire, as a result of the German challenge, and the German menace. For the Italians, the treaty was a disappointment, because, with the subordinate settlements with Austria and in the east, it failed to recognize Italian aspirations or honor Italian claims.

With the American debate over the league of nations, I shall not deal in this article; what I mean to try to set forth is the extent to which the treaty may be regarded, with all its limitations, as the best world settlement yet known, superior to the later peace of Westphalia, of Utrecht and of Vienna, and to emphasize some of the reasons which are still discoverable in a document, which at the present moment is the target of world wide assiduous.

To begin at the beginning, it seems to me that the great virtue of the treaty of Versailles is the degree to which it has recognized the rights of peoples to dispose of their own destinies.

Roughly speaking, there were in central Europe, at the moment when the world war broke, forty old empires.

One may assume it to be axiomatic that peace in Europe, in the world, is not possible so long as it is predicated upon injustice, upon the sacrifice of the rights of millions of men and women to liberty, the use of their own tongues and the observance of their own customs. The proof of all this is to be found in the long series of alarms which preceded the coming of the world war, and in the circumstances of its arrival.

Now the treaty of Versailles, of St. Germain and the associated documents has made a welcome change in the world. There is a Polish state by virtue of the treaty which includes most of the Polish people, there is a Czechoslovak state, which includes most of the Czechs and Slovaks; the Slavonic peoples have been set free and have joined hands with their Serb brethren against the German and the Slav. Alsace-Lorraine is French.

Roughly speaking, we have set free some 40,000,000 of men and women, we have created new nations and we have aided in the extension of the frontiers of liberty to include their brothers, lately held in servitude.

To use this in the great human fact, that this liberation has not been a mere general delivery, but, that it is at once a step toward peace and a step toward the realization of the ideal of peace. Possibly this may be said to be the greatest fact of the world.

Without exception these 40,000,000 of people, living in a condition of political and intellectual slavery, among these were 20,000,000 of Jews, 1,000,000 of Armenians, 1,000,000 of Greeks, 1,000,000 of Italians in the Trentino and Trieste districts.

Slaves Given Less Than Due. At the moment when we have given them something less than they were entitled to, we have placed no other people under their rule, and the new gain to liberty is upwards of 4,000,000. As to Rumania, the question is restricted to the fact that in many cases there have been included within the frontiers of new states territories of Rumania which were lately under the rule of Austria, Hungary, and Poland, which is not included within Polish frontiers, but created a free city, the German population districts assigned to the Poles, the Austrian-German minorities in Bohemia, the Polish-German minorities in the Alps, in new Italian districts, and with ever growing insistence, the case of the Near East, are presented as examples.

Further than this, it is argued, with no small justice, that the new nations are displaying an eagerness to emulate their neighbors wholly commendable in the spirit displayed by their own states yesterday. Out of this situation have grown innumerable disputes, the Poles against the Lithuanians, the Lithuanians against the Russians, the Czechs against the Poles, and the Ruthenians, in Teutonia and at the southwestern end of the Carpathians. Thus we have established one set of war-causing disputes only to find that we have sown a new crop, the first harvest of which is now being gathered.

Yet recognizing the measure of justice in all these arguments, the things are still manifest, first that it was not less necessary to liberate the 40,000,000, whether the result would lead to general peace or to new rivalries; and second, if justice has been done, the aggregate injustice, far less considerable than that which has been abolished. Measured by human beings, the gain for freedom is still enormous.

Millions of Poles Freed. To take the case of Germany, alone, we have liberated within her old frontiers between five and six millions of Poles, Alsace-Lorrainers and Danes. We have freed, moreover, at least a half a million Germans to Poland, or placed them outside the German frontiers, and under the control of the league of nations. In the same way we have placed an equal number of Germans under the control of the league of nations, and under the supervision of France, subject to the supervision of the league of nations with the right to vote to return to Germany 15 years hence. And if we have thus put Germans under alien rule, against their will, we have left, almost an equal number of Poles under German rule.

In liberating 20,000,000 of Poles, we have temporarily failed in separate from the new Poland Galicia district which were Polish before the war, and contain a Polish majority, along with a Ruthenian majority, but there has been no settlement of this issue and these new Ruthenians were under alien Austrian rule before the war, and they have changed masters, but not their conditions, that is all.

We have given Italy, along with some million of Italian speaking peoples, the Trentino and Trieste, a quarter of a million of Italian speaking peoples in the upper Adige valley and an equal number of Slovenians in the Trentino, but as to the Slovenians, they were subjects of German Austria before the war, and they have changed masters, but not their conditions, that is all.

Some Mistakes Made. In achieving this liberation we made mistakes, we did incidental wrongs, but since failure in human beings made the peace, would it not be better to take a long step in the direction of abolishing human slavery, political and intellectual slavery, military slavery, and the like, the longest step in all human history, in my judgment.

The inevitable has happened, the Poles, the Rumanians, the Jews, the Greeks, and the Carolo-Slovenians, and the like, have taken a long step in the direction of abolishing human slavery, political and intellectual slavery, military slavery, and the like, the longest step in all human history, in my judgment.

Result, in brief, are the territorial aspects of the recent peace settlement. It is not my purpose to discuss the phases that I am addressing the present comment. As to Elbasan, what- ever criticism may be made of it, one

Col. Malone, of British Parliament, Thinks Factions Would Confer. London, Eng., Nov. 6.—A draft of the conditions upon which the leaders of the soviet government in Russia are willing to discuss peace with the allied and associated governments is in possession of Lieut. Col. Lestrang Malone, a Liberal member of parliament, who recently returned from a trip to Russia, according to his statement in the house of commons. He said he believed it would be possible to call a peace conference of the warring factions in Russia on the basis that all existing de facto governments in the various parts of Russia should remain in full control of the territory they now are occupying, subject to adjustment. The removal of the economic blockade of Bolshevik Russia also would be a condition.

Col. Malone said that he was not enamored with Bolshevism, but that he had been impressed, nevertheless, with the work of national reconstruction being performed by the soviet government.

The terms referred to by Col. Malone, are identical in the main, with those which Wm. C. Bullitt, who went to Russia as a representative of the American peace deputation, brought back from Moscow to Paris last spring. They included, in addition to the raising of the economic blockade, the immediate withdrawal of allied troops from Russia, the suspension of further military aid to the anti-soviet governments, proclamation of a general armistice and recognition on the part of the soviet government responsible for the foreign debt of Russia.

That slimy film which you feel on your teeth causes most tooth troubles. Every modern dentist knows that. Dental science, for many years, has sought a way to end it. That film is what discolors, not the teeth. It is the basis of tartar. It holds food substance which ferments and forms acid. It holds the acid in contact with the teeth to cause decay. Millions of germs breed in it. They, with tartar, are the chief cause of pyorrhea. So the major object in cleaning teeth is to keep them free from film. Old-time methods fail to do that. Teeth still discolor, still decay, as millions of people know. The reason is that they don't get rid of the film. The film is clinging. It gets between the teeth, enters crevices and stays. Day and night, month after month, it is a potential source of danger. Now a Way to End It. Science now has found a way to end it. Five years of tests have proved this. The way is now embodied in a dentifrice called Pepsodent. And we urge you to see what it does. Pepsodent is based on pepsin, the digestant of albumin. The film is albuminous matter. The object of Pepsodent is to dissolve it, then to constantly combat it. But pepsin must be activated, and the usual method is an acid harmful to the teeth. So pepsin long seemed barred. But science has now found a harmless activating method. It is made use of in Pepsodent. Now millions of teeth are daily cleaned as they never were before. Try the method ten days on yours. Send this coupon for a 10-Day Tube. Use like any tooth paste. Note how clean your teeth feel after using. Mark the absence of the slimy film. See how the teeth whiten as the film disappears.
