

POLITICIANS PREDICT ENORMOUS FUNDS FOR COMING CAMPAIGN

August Belmont, the multi-millionaire of New York, has been one of the mainstays in the campaign for Judge Parker's nomination as the Democratic candidate for president, and during the convention at St. Louis he was looked upon as the real leader of the Parker forces. A circumstantial story published a few weeks ago stated that Belmont would lead in a movement to raise a campaign fund of $5,000,000 in case Judge Parker heads the democratic ticket. As Belmont is president of the Interurban Railway Co., was at the head of the dining syndicate that constructed the subway, is worth millions and has long been a leader in financial affairs, the chances are that if he sets out in earnest to build up a campaign fund, he could raise as much money as almost anybody.

August Belmont.

An interesting story that gained a good deal of currency recently gave a most extraordinary twist to the political situation. It was to the effect that Belmont represents the Rothschilds in this country and that the Rothschilds are heavily interested in the oil business in Europe. For this reason, it is alleged, the Standard Oil company, fearing that in case of Parker's election the company's European rivals might gain some advantage, would support Roosevelt with all its influence.

Politicians even now are dreaming of rival campaign funds built up by the Rothschilds and the Standard Oil company. In their visions they see these funds rising higher than the skyscrapers.

"BILLION DOLLAR" BABY HAS HAD A CLOSE CALL

(From Latest Photograph.)

WILLIAM A. CLARK II OF BUTTE, MONT., MULTI-MILLIONAIRE AT THE AGE OF 24, WITH HIS LITTLE SON, W. A. III, WHO WILL INHERIT BILLIONS.

BUTTE, July 9.—Last week $1,200 was spent in telegrams and cable messages because Senator Clark's grandson, W. A. Clark III, was threatened with diphtheria. The little child is the idol of the senator's eye and is equally idolized by his fond father, who is only 24 years of age. Will Clark was in California, and had telegrams sent every 15 minutes telling of the health of the baby. The senator was on the Mediterranean and cablegrams were sent to Tangier and other ports every hour, although three-fourths of the messages never reached him.

Senator Clark's income is now a million dollars a month or three times as much as that of the czar of Russia. At the rate his wealth is piling up his child, who is the only male heir and descendant, will be heir to billions when he reaches his majority.

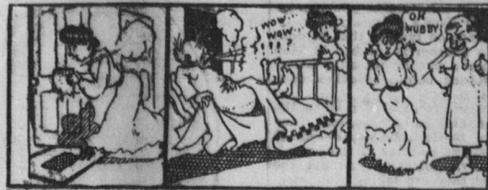

The baby is a husky little chap, 18 months old and able to squall, when displeased, louder than most babies. A nurse and a house full of servants watch this precious little night and day, as the mother died five weeks after the baby's birth and the father is away from Butte most of his time.

Recently the child figured in a runaway in which both the life of the child and that of the nurse were in danger. Young Clark was at Los

THE BRIDE PUT THE MUSTARD PLASTER ON THE WRONG MAN

LONDON, July 9.—A fashionable hotel in Bridgeport was convulsed recently by a bride's mistake. The bride's husband was taken ill suddenly, and she went downstairs to make a mustard poultice. Returning she opened a door, rushed in, threw back the bedclothes and slapped the red hot plaster on the inmate. There was a howl of pain and the frightened bride heard: "Great God, you female murderer, you have killed!" The bride took a good look at the man, shrieked and fled. It was not her husband. She had blundered into the wrong room. The real husband heard the noise, came out and laughed so heartily that his colic left him.

INDIANS THRIVE ON DEADLY LIZARDS

LOS ANGELES, July 8.—Dr. Edmund B. Alexander, of Los Angeles, who has just returned from an extended trip of exploration in Lower California, believes he has solved the long disputed question regarding the poisonous nature of the chucawalla, a gigantic lizard found all through the deserts and arid areas of the southern United States and Mexico. It has been stated by many and it has been generally believed that the creature was poisonous. A few have contended that it is harmless. Dr. Alexander has joined the ranks of the latter class for he was bitten by one of the creatures and experienced no bad results therefrom. He tells, however, of having seen a dog bitten on the nose by one of the creatures and the dog died. This he believes to have been from blood poisoning, which might have resulted from the bite of the animal and not from the venom.

The chucawalla is a repulsive looking reptile attaining a length of 18 to 20 inches and would scarcely appeal to the palate of the white man, but in sections visited by the doctor he found the native Indians eating the creatures and he says that they are considered a luxury.

OUTCASTS OF ALL EUROPE ARE BEING DUMPED IN AMERICA

NEW YORK, July 9.—The rate of $10 steerage made by the transatlantic liners is bringing to this country a most undesirable class of immigrants. Foreign countries are suspected of paying the fare of many of their paupers in order to be rid of them. The movement attracted so much attention in Europe that the London Daily Mirror sent a staff man, W. M. Curnock, in the steerage of the Holland-American liner Potsdam, to learn what kind of people were making the rush. This is what he has written of the trip:

After 11 days of stormy weather and high seas, and in company with 700 outcasts of eastern Europe, I have completed the first two-pound transatlantic passage.

After at first twenty-four hours of comparative calm, the weather changed for the worse and the horrors of sea sickness commenced among people only fit to herd with cattle.

The arrangements made by the authorities were admirable in the extreme. Four meals a day were provided, the chief of which being dinner at noon, consisting of excellent thick soup, perfectly similar to that given to passengers in the first-class cabin, followed by stewed meat with gravy and potatoes, and a substantial pudding.

Breakfast and tea largely comprised uncooked salted herrings, tea, coffee and bread, a style of fare particularly relished by most of the emigrants.

But for the people themselves, there was nothing of which one could complain. Cleanliness was banned by the majority. Any man or woman observed washing with any thoroughness was regarded as a monstrosity. Few removed their clothes from the time they left Europe, with the result that in spite of the strictest sanitary precautions in turning out every one on deck for two hours every morning while the whole place below was cleaned and scoured, there were disagreeable consequences.

Three days after leaving the doctor held a general vaccination, but many nullified the effects by squeezing and rubbing their arms.

The effect of the stormy weather was revolting in the extreme. Men, women and children, overcome by sickness, took no trouble to seek the privacy of their bunks, but lay huddled together in a human heap.

Here and there evidence of some better feeling was shown, but only among the women.

The worst types of all were some fifty or sixty Russians and Poles, who came from the east end of London, the majority of whom were tailors.

With the last days of the voyage the weather improved and conditions grew more bearable.

The doctor, by declaring that the customs would not permit the emigrants to land unless they had a more cleanly appearance, induced a general washing and bathing of persons and clothes.

The Jews refused on principle but the rest appeared later on deck with shining faces and glistening hair, and a wholesome smell of soap.

But in spite of everything that the doctor can do, there will probably be forty or fifty who will be returned to Europe.

SCOOPED UP A RARE TILE FISH.

LOS ANGELES, July 9.—Jeter B. Hamil, a fisherman, has made a contribution to science. When he drew his seine on the banks off Port Pimlico, Friday morning, he had, among other fish, one stranger. It was a brilliant and beautiful specimen and weighed about 30 pounds. The fish showed a remarkable combination of colors, brown, yellow, blue, pink, black, harmoniously and strikingly blended.

Never having seen a fish like unto this, Hamil did not know whether it was edible or not, but he had intelligence enough neither to make a test of its qualities nor to return it to the sea, but brought it ashore and called to it the attention of local scientists. It was then discovered that the fish taken from the waters of the Pacific was the "tile fish," Lopholatilus chamaeleonticeps, a fish supposed to be extinct and having been seen heretofore in the Atlantic.

The first time that there is any record of this fish having been seen was in 1879, when a cod schooner ran into a school of Nantucket and about 5,000 pounds of the fish were taken. During the next three years these fish were frequently taken alive and then of a sudden, the sea for many miles south of Nantucket, Long Island and the New Jersey shore were covered with the floating tile fish, slain by some mysterious force or malady. An area of 6,000 or 7,000 square miles was thickly bespattered with the dead or dying fish and it was estimated that no less than a billion were included in the number. Since then not a live fish has been seen till that taken by Hamil.

A great deal of speculation as to the wholesale cause of the death of these fish was indulged in. Numerous specimens were examined without any cause being found. It was finally decided that a sudden lowering of the temperature of the warm belt by the presence of an unusual amount of ice from the shores of the continent had been responsible for the extermination of the breed.

The tile fish is a deep water fish. It is possible that it is a native of the Pacific, and that an immense school strayed around the South American continent and up into America.
