

FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE TO BE BURIED IN WESTMINSTER

(By United Press Leased Wire.) LONDON, Aug. 15.—Florence Nightingale, heroine of the Crimean war, will be buried at Westminster Abbey, Miss Nightingale died Saturday at her London home, in her 91st year. She will be borne to her sepulchre in state, escorted by a great military cortege. This is contrary to her last requests.

Miss Nightingale wished her funeral to be simple, but the soldiers of the British army are petitioning that it be made a public pageant.

As a sequel to the death of the "queen of the nurses," John Finegan, her orderly during the Crimean war, died today.

Thousands of telegrams of condolence are pouring in, expressing regret at the death of England's heroine. The king sent a personal representative to express the grief of the royal family.

Born in Italy

Florence Nightingale was born in the city of Florence, from which her name was borrowed, May 12, 1820, of wealthy English parents.

When she grew into young womanhood she abandoned society and social friends, going to Germany and France to study hospital methods and nursing.

Upon her return to London she soon became the recognized leader in hospital reform. Shortly after the beginning of the Crimean war, in the winter of 1854, when the world was horrified by the graphic descriptions of the suffering of the sick and wounded soldiers on the battlefield, the British war office asked Florence Nightingale to take charge of the hospital corps.

Task Herculean

Arriving the day after the battle of Inkerman, she found 18,000 sick and wounded soldiers lying in filth, covered with vermin, dying for lack of care and attention. Miss Nightingale started to work. The extraordinary death rate of 42 per cent fell to 2 per cent. She herself fell ill from overwork and anxiety, but insisted upon remaining there with her charges, and when convalescent resumed her arduous duties. It was her practice to make a complete inspection of the hospital camp every night before retiring.

On these tours she carried a lamp in her hand, and became known as the "lady with a lamp."

Received Many Honors.

In 1856 Miss Nightingale was decorated by Queen Victoria for her service in the Crimea.

In 1904, the Dignity of the Lady of Grace of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem was conferred upon her. She was the first woman to be so honored.

A year later the Honorable Freedom of the City of London was bestowed upon her.

DIDN'T KNOW LEG WAS BROKEN

Although his leg was broken in two places as the result of being run down by an automobile Saturday night, George Jacobs didn't know he was injured and went without medical aid for 12 hours. Jacobs was struck by a car operated by Carlyle Bibb, son of John T. Bibb, as he was crossing the street near the Commercial dock. Jacobs was injured in his leg about nine months ago, and was still using improvised crutches at the time of the accident. After Jacobs had been taken to police headquarters, young Bibb offered to obtain medical assistance for him, but Jacobs refused. Yesterday he was unable to use his leg and was taken to the County hospital, where Dr. McReery found that it had been broken in two places.

THEY ARE BREEDING MILLIONS OF BUGS AT THIS INSECTARY

CALIFORNIA STATE INSECTARY

SACRAMENTO, Aug. 15.—Right now they are breeding insect pests at the state insectary to keep up the food supply for those beneficial parasites which feed on the pests. Supt. Edward Carnes and his assistants, Frederick McKew and Geo. Comper, have to scratch around lively for pests. Supplies shipped in from infected orchards are more than welcome.

Comper has just returned from the Philippine islands, where he collected a big colony of Cryptogonus Orbiculus, which is regarded as the most promising parasite to keep down the numbers of the mealy bug, a pest on oranges and lemons. The mealy bug looks like a wisp of wool but moves rapidly and has a bill hook in his mouth which he drives into the tree and fruits and through which he absorbs the sap. It so happens that the larvae of Cryptogonus has a bill of his own, which he drives into the neck of the mealy bug with equal avidity and with most excellent results from the grower's standpoint. When adult, Cryptogonus is one of the famous ladybird family of intelligent insects. By a strange bit of natural selection the young Cryptogonus can hardly be told from the adult mealy bug except when he lays hold on the bug and makes a meal of him.

The season's work at the insectary is now well along. The first of the season was the shipping of 36,000,000 individual specimens of the regulation ladybird, whose scientific name is Hippodamia Convergens. She is found in vast swarms in the snows of the Sierras, and her special dainty is the mealy aphid and the aphid whose presence on elm trees gives forth annoying sticky exudations.

After that came Comus Fusca, a brown fly, who trims the brown apricot scale down to manageable proportions. Later came Scutellista Cynana, a blue fly, which finds its food in the black scale pest.

Coccophagus Licani and Encyrtus Flavus are flies which thrive on the soft orange scale pest, Vitis-dalia Cardinalis is a ladybird whose hobby is the destruction of the cottony cushion scale.

In about two weeks Caliphates Messor, a dainty little wasp will be sent out to catch the codling moth and save the apple crop.

All of these bugs with long names and still longer friendships for the fruit raisers of California are kept on hand by the insectarians and tended with wonderful care. They are put in cold storage through the winter and are awakened in the spring by being placed in the sunshine. However any manufacturer of infant food will make his fortune by inventing artificial food for these tiny insects and saving the constant hunt and worry over the natural food supply.

Human Falcon Close To $47,000 Prize

AMIENS, France, Aug. 15.—Favored by the first calm weather since the start of the great cross-country aeroplane race, LeBlanc, the "falcon," completed the fifth and next to the last leg of the left Douai at 5:20 a. m. gliding lightly to the ground 49 miles nearer Paris at 6:20 o'clock.

Auburn, holder of second place in the race, took 18 minutes longer to make the flight.

Barring an accident, LeBlanc is the sure winner of the contest for the prize which totals $47,000. His record is considered perfect.

On Wednesday the final aerial dash will take place. From Amiens the man-birds will fly to Paris, alighting on the parade grounds at Issy, from where the race started Aug. 6.

Daily Short Story

THE AERIAL LIMITED
By H. H. Hindson

When the first passenger-dirigible made its initial trip between New York and Chicago there was excitement everywhere, but as the seasons came and went people gave little heed to the great torpedo-shaped monsters which coursed the air far above them.

Late one afternoon, about the middle of June, 1920, Dan Wagner sat on the porch at his home on the heights east of the city. As he studied a telegram his heart beat faster. The message ran: "Dear Dan: Father and I left for Chicago today at 1 o'clock on the Overhead Limited. Think of me when you see the lights pass."

"DORA NELSON."

Why should the girl ask him to think of her when she knew that one-half of his thought vibration was given to her constantly? He would do more than think of her. He would catch a glimpse of her face as the sky-liner passed. He called up the weather bureau and learned with alarm that sudden changes were expected before morning.

Meanwhile, Dora Nelson sat beside her father in the magnificently appointed apartments of the airship. With joy and enthusiasm she drank in the pure air far above the smoky towns and cities. Below she watched the trains following the threads of steel. There was music, too, and choice refreshments. As the landscape fell away beneath her she gradually became accustomed to the sound of the whirring motors. Finally the enthusiastic passengers caught the distant blue of the lake dotted with steamers. She learned that they were on time and would reach their destination by 9 o'clock in the evening, while six hours more would land them safely in Chicago. Some of the tourists noticed dark patches of cloud on the horizon, but the electric lights were soon turned on and dangers were forgotten.

At precisely 8:30 Wagner's aeroplane shot up from its course, and after cutting some fantastic figures in the air, rose majestically, circling higher and higher in the constantly increasing breeze. Wagner was an expert, and could rise, dip and turn like a bird. He defied all danger and courted the strong wind. His machine, moreover, was one which had been made under special supervision, and had many improvements over those generally in use. Occasionally he glanced at his watch. The "limited" had been delayed.

He put on full power and headed toward Buffalo. After traveling some distance he caught the light of the oncoming craft, which shone like a huge star in the east, but it was far from its course, and was sailing low over the lake. His heart was in his mouth. Something had gone wrong. Then he saw a rocket go up. It was the signal of distress. The wind grew fiercer, and the forked lightning played in the distant gloom. As he came nearer he heard shouts from the dark waves beneath him, and a flash revealed the struggling forms of the passengers. They were reasonably safe, however, having dropped with life preservers from the ill-fated air craft, which was bent in the form of a semi-circle by the strong blasts. Moreover, a steamer from Buffalo was fast overhauling them.

Another bright flash revealed the wrecked dirigible and the form of a woman clinging to the ropes far above the car. She had evidently refused to obey the order to jump, and had trusted herself to the crippled airship. Dan pursued the huge craft, which lightened of its passengers, was drifting rapidly. As he overhauled the derelict, and passed above the drifting leviathan of the sky, he directed his searchlight to the clinging figure of the girl who hung tremblingly to the ropes, with a life preserver about her, and shouted a name through his megaphone.

An answering cry which thrilled him came back. Then, as he sped on, he dropped a weighted line, telling Dora to make it fast about her waist. A motor and windlass did the rest, and in a few moments Dora was seated beside him. Then in the higher currents they left the storm, but as they made their way through the gloom, they saw a blinding flash far behind, followed by a loud explosion. The overhead limited had been struck by lightning, and was no more.

Dora and Dan, who is president of the Trans-Continental Airship line, still make their summer trips over the route; and Dora often tells little Dan, who listens with wide-open eyes, of a perilous trip she and his father once had on that awful night.

AUTO AND A STREET CAR COLLIDE

(By United Press Leased Wire.) PUYALLUP, Aug. 5.—An automobile driven by Clark Gauer ran into an old line car at the corner of Pioneer avenue and Meridian street yesterday afternoon. W. R. Scott, riding with Gauer, was thrown 10 feet and landed on the pavement. The footboard and fenders were torn off one side of the auto. Gauer stuck to the machine and was uninjured. Scott is at Meeker sanitarium recovering from painful bruises.

Whirls and Leaps and Flashes in Wordless, "Visual Opera"

ANNA PAVLOWA.

NEW YORK, Aug. 15.—The little fatter of all the Russians has said ("Yes" (there being a shrewd supposition that the little fatter's pocket was thereby handsomely lined by the American grand opera magnates), and Anna Pavlova, the wonderful, is coming back to America this fall to bewitch the nation again with her dancing.

With her bulldog and her Michael Mordkin she has been spending an easy summer vacation in London, but now the many trunks are being packed and soon she and her athletic dancing partner will be astonishing American audiences with their thistle-down lightness of foot.

This year the priestess of the tripping toe will present in America an absolute novelty—visual opera, it is to be called.

Pavlova, Mordkin and a big company of Russian ballet dancers will interpret some of the great masterpieces of music all in pirouettes and whirlings and leaping and flashings of legs. Not a word will be spoken during the entire performance.

The dancing troupe will make a lightning tour of the country, playing one-night stands in the biggest theaters in the principal cities of the United States.

THEY'LL CATCH IT NO MATTER WHO THEY OBEY

(By United Press Leased Wire.) GUTHRIE, Okla., Aug. 15.—If the state officials agree Governor Haskell's order, issued today, to move to Oklahoma City, they will be in contempt of the state supreme court, which has forbidden the removal of the capital from Guthrie. If they refuse to join Governor Haskell's executive force already at Oklahoma City, their offices will be declared vacant by the governor. Haskell has given until midnight tonight in which to obey his mandate.

It is considered likely that the officials will refuse to obey the governor, deeming the chances more favorable for them to abide by the court's ruling and fight against removal than to disobey the court.
