Cynthia Grey's Correspondent

Dear Miss Grey: 1.—What will polish gunmetal calf shoes? 2.—Please give two good candy recipes. NANCY.

A.: 1.—Gunmetal shoes are not supposed to have a polish. Brush them thoroughly then rub them with sweet oil. This will keep them in good condition. 2.—Turkish Delight. Soak one box of granulated gelatin in one-fourth cupful of water, pour over this one-half cupful of hot water and stir until dissolved. Now stir into this four cupfuls of sugar, put the saucepan on the back of the range, and heat and stir until the sugar is all dissolved. Push the saucepan to the front of the range and let the contents boil ten minutes. Add the strained juice of 1 orange and 1 lemon, and boil ten minutes longer. Have ready cut into small pieces one cupful each of walnut meats and almonds, stir these into the candy with the grated peel of 1 orange. Butter a long, shallow pan and pour the candy into this, having it about one-half inch thick, and put in a cool, dry place for two days. Cut in squares, dust with powdered sugar, and pack in boxes.

Seafoam. Boil 2 cupfuls of sugar with 1 cupful of corn sirup until a little of it dropped in cold water will form a crisp ball. Have the whites of 2 eggs beaten dry and stiff, pour the boiling candy on it and beat five minutes, then flavor with 1 teaspoonful of vanilla, add 1 cupful of filbert meats minced fine, and beat until the candy begins to get thick. Drop by spoonfuls on oiled paper.

Observations of a Bachelor Girl

There's no hope for old bachelors when they take to drinking tea.

The man who tells how other girls are chasing him, is the very one girls do not chase.

One would think that the average girl marries the first man who proposes for fear she'd never get another chance, judging from the kind of man she marries.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

MME. CURIE. Mme. Curie, who in the recent past discovered the element polonium, and who was codiscoverer with her husband of the metal radium, is called by her admirers the greatest woman in the world. This despite the fact that the Institute of France in joint session refused to elect her to the Academy of Sciences. Had any man done for the world of science what Mme. Curie has, he would undoubtedly have been unanimously elected, her friends say.

Mme. Curie lives frugally in a quiet house in Paris, screened from the outer world by a high wall. When she is not in her laboratory she is to be found teaching her little daughter. She is as devoted to her home as if she had never even heard of radium, alpha rays, gamma rays, polonium. Like most savants, Mme. Curie is lost to the ordinary world when engaged in scientific work. Once when in the middle of an absorbing experiment, she was disturbed by a servant, who ran into the laboratory screaming: "Madame, madame, I have swallowed a pin!" "There, there, don't cry," said Mme. Curie soothingly, "here's another pin you may have."

10 WAYS THAT WOMEN MAY EARN MONEY

NUMBER EIGHT. A young woman in Boston, who had the natural talent for the work, started a series of parlor schools of dancing and deportment for children between the ages of seven and fifteen, and with three such enterprises in operation she cleared a very good weekly income; much better than she would have earned in a shop or office. Her plan was simple and might be easily followed by any young woman whose tastes lie in this direction. In the three classes which she organized in different neighborhoods in the city, she had fifty-odd pupils. They were all small children and their parents paid 25 cents for each lesson. The classes were held on Saturdays and lasted a little over one hour. Simple gymnastic exercises, figure dancing and talks on etiquette and general deportment made up the curriculum. One class was held at 11 o'clock in the morning, another at 1:30 p. m. and the last at 4 p. m. This arrangement gave the teacher ample time to reach each neighborhood in time for her classes. The sessions were held in the parlors of private homes. The teacher paid 75 cents to $1 each for the use of each room and this was her only expense. The dancing school operated by professional teachers in some times misunderstood by mothers of younger children and they hesitate to allow their youngsters to attend the schools. But this privately operated school seems to have no objectionable feature and the Boston girl prospered from the start. When she finally gave up the schools after two years (to get married) she had 110 pupils and gave only Saturdays to the work. She secured her pupils by personal calls upon parents and her net income averaged $22 a week.

More American Fairy Tales

FOR THE YOUNGSTERS, AND THE OLDESTERS, TOO AND THE FAIRY WIND BLEW AND BLEW AND BLEW

Fairies have often ridden like heroes to the rescue on the wind. Fairies have run away from their human friends on the wings of the wind.

Our writer friends, however—good folk though they be—have seldom told us just WHERE the wind did its pranks to help out the fairies. In this case the children friends of the writer—and he surely hopes that ALL children are his friends—may take out their school geographies and lay their finger on the very place where it all happened.

Find the little river which connects Lake Huron and Lake Superior. It is St. Mary's river. You will also find the Soo canal; and this word "Soo," by the way, comes from the French word "saut," which means JUMP. The St. Mary's river jumps at this place. That is, there are swift rapids here—and that's why the canal was dug. Now if the steamer Alice passed through the big canal as soon as she reached it, her little cabin boy, Charlie, would be far on his way north in Lake Superior before a message from his mother could reach him.

So the fairies blew the wind against the river! They began to work fully ten hours before the Alice arrived, and they blew and blew until the water of the shallow river backed into the lake to the north, and the Alice had to drop her anchor and wait for the wind to stop.

Of course, you know how soundly boys of fourteen sleep. Tired Charlie, who had to work very hard, was lying in his bunk dreaming about his mother and his little sisters at home, when the words, "Charlie, Charlie," were whispered in his ear. Charlie only turned over and tried to go to sleep again without once opening his eyes. He was sure his mother and his little sisters were all right at home.

"Charlie, Charlie!" the voice said gain in his ear, louder this time, and Charlie woke up. A little fairy girl scarcely six inches high sat on the edge of his bunk.

Charlie looked at her in surprise. "Charlie, your mother wants you," said the fairy maiden. "Mymother—" gasped Charlie.

"Yes, the money is yours and hers. But you have to go west with your mother to get it," she said in a whisper, as if afraid to wake up the steward, sleeping in the after cabin of the iron ore boat. "My mother! the money!" repeated the boy.

"The will says that you will have to be with your mother when she talks with the lawyers—" and now Charlie was wide awake. He bounded out of his bunk—and the little fairy girl was already at the door of the after cabin quarters, with his hand raised in warning that he must not wake his mates. As if in a dream, Charlie followed Miss Fairy on deck. And there he was lowered over the side of the great iron ore boat—which stood high out of the water, for she carried no cargo on her way north—and he does not yet know how it all happened.

But he found himself in an automobile (for the first time), and next on a railroad train with a ticket and lunch in his pocket. And the first thing he clearly remembered is that he entered his little home, and that his mother and sisters kissed him, and that he and his mother traveled west.

Now Charlie doesn't have to work on ships to help his mother. He goes to school and promises to become a very smart man.
