ORIENTAL TOUCH FOR THE MOTOR GIRL

By HENRI STAYUEL PARIS 1911

In this motor hat and veil there's a strong suggestion of the Orient, although the photograph came directly from Paris—the hotbed of early fashions. This hat is of natural-colored straw and cream lace, and is fezz-shaped—fitting close to the head. The ends of the gracefully draped blue veil are weighted and finished with tassels.

Red-Blooded American Heroes

The British had won the battle of Blandenburg, and the troops were marching on the city of Washington. It was the war of 1812. Dolly Madison, the beautiful wife of President Madison, stood alone in the blue room of the white house undecided what to do. Her meditations were interrupted by the clatter of a horse's hoofs on the pavement outside, the sound growing louder and louder as the horse galloped down the avenue. "Whoa!" Dolly Madison rushed to the window to see a courier dismount and run up the steps of the executive mansion. He bore dispatches for Mrs. Madison and was immediately admitted. Mrs. Madison took the message and read eagerly: "The British have won at Blandenburg and are marching on Washington." She was advised to fly immediately from the city. The message was signed by her husband. There was not a second to be lost. Dolly Madison summoned her carriage and hastily packed a few necessities of dress. Already she could hear the muffled drums of the British on the outskirts of the city and the tramp, tramp, tramp of the troops. She went to the state dining room and packed the plate and such of the valuable china as she could. In the blue room hung a full-length portrait of Washington, painted by Stuart. "It must be saved," she cried. Every moment brought danger of capture, but with her own hands she tried to remove the picture. It was too heavy for her. She knocked the frame to pieces and removed the precious canvas. Just then two gentlemen from New York entered the room, Jacob Baker and R. G. L. De Peyster. She turned to the men. "Take this picture," she said, "and save it. If you cannot keep it from the British, destroy it." Snatching up the declaration of independence, Dolly Madison ran at last from the room and entered her carriage with her sister. Down the avenue came the enemy with blaring trumpets and rolling drums. Dolly Madison's carriage fled, as before a storm. The horses were lashed into a run, the carriage swaying dangerously from side to side. Reaching the river, they were safe at last beyond the clutches of the enemy. Mr. Baker ran with the portrait, secreting it in a farmhouse. The British came on, firing the government buildings and leaving chaos in their wake. When the war was over and the American cause had triumphed, the capital was rebuilt from its ashes on a grander scale than before. The portrait of Washington was brought back to the city and hangs today in a prominent place in the white house. The declaration of independence, so gallantly saved by Dolly Madison, is still in possession of the government, sacredly guarded as a priceless heritage, saved by Dolly Madison's courage and devotion.

What to Do With Left-Overs

BY CYNTHIA GREY.

It is frequently puzzling to the housekeeper to know how to use up the bits of eatables left over from meal to meal. There is usually not enough left of any one thing for a dish and what can she do with them?

Take for instance cold vegetables. If they have been prepared with a white sauce—corn, beans, peas or what not—they may be dumped all together in a colander and washed. With a bit of lettuce and French dressing these can be made into tasty salads, with or without nuts in addition.

If there is a bit of ham left and cheese and a few slices of stale bread, some hot ham sandwiches can be made. Mince the ham, mix with grated cheese and spread on one slice of bread, cover with another, cut in two and brown on each side in hot butter. Serve piping hot.

Left over corn will turn into many good things. Corn cobs are made by beating until light the yolks of 2 eggs and adding 2 cups corn. Fold in the beaten egg whites and 2 tablespoons flour. Season and drop by spoonfuls into hot fat in skillet.

If there's a cup of cold peas left, add a small slice of onion and 2 cups water and simmer until peas can be mashed easily. Season, add 2 cups milk and a little thickening. Let boil up once, strain through a colander, reheat and serve.

If there are a few green peppers on hand, try this: Cut off the tips remove seeds and parboil for 3 minutes. Fill with left over creamed peas, cover top with buttered crumbs and heat in oven, or mix vegetables with mayonnaise, add peppers and serve cold as a salad with lettuce.

A cupful of cooked tomato can be used in a thousand ways. For soup, heat with a couple of slices of onion, parsley, salt and pepper and bring to a boil. Put in a piece of baking soda the size of a large pea, and let this boil up also, stirring well. Have ready a quart of milk, scalded, with a tablespoonful of butter rubbed smooth with as much flour, and pour the tomato through a strainer into this; let it cook for a moment and serve hot. The soda prevents the milk from curdling.

Savory rice is very good to serve as a vegetable or as a border for meat. First measure your left-over tomato soup. For each cup of soup allow 1-4 cup of rice. Heat soup to boiling point in upper part of double boiler, placed on the range, and then stir in the rice. After boiling hard for two minutes cover and place over boiling water in the under part of the double boiler to steam for two

TODAY'S AMERICAN WOMAN

"Sweet Sixteen," But a Real Live Man Hater.

HARRIET STANDON.

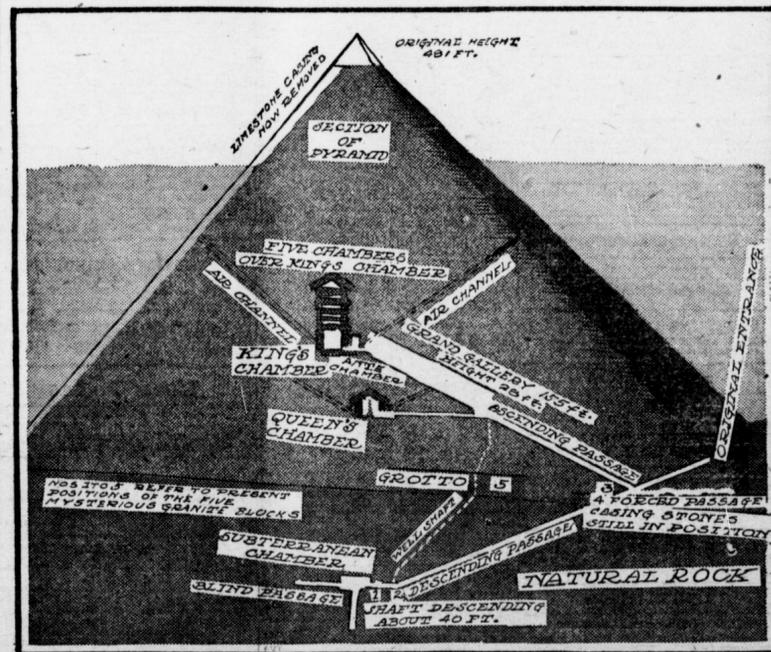

Troubles and fame have come to Harriet Standon in about equal proportions, but because the troubles are due to menfolk she poses as a real strong man-hater. Get her in the right setting as a Chicago girl of social position and considerable wealth. With a talent for singing and dancing, she was seen one evening at a private musicale by Richard Carle. He predicted a future, if she went on the stage. Later he persuaded her to accept the leading role in his musical comedy. During this first engagement she married, at sixteen, but was soon disillusioned. Then along came a stockbroker who in the guise of friendship attempted to secure half her fortune for "investment." It was a get-rich-quick scheme and a woman friend saved her from it. Then, when Miss Standon returned to the stage she had some disagreeable experiences with men. She recently accepted the role of Victoria in "Sweet Sixteen" in preference to others she was considering because this Victor Herbert operatta has no male chorus, thus minimizing the objectionable masculine element! But maybe the right man will come along yet, and capivate this winsome prima donna.

Monkey Is Guest of Honor at a Dinner

(By United Press Leased Wire.) AKRON, O., Feb. 15.—Akron's smart set is in a furore today over a dinner given yesterday by Miss Lucy Sawyer, daughter of the mayor of Akron, in honor of Consul, the near-man ape Consul, who was invited in a correct evening dress, ate everything on the menu. "He used a knife and fork," said Miss Sawyer, "as any gentleman would."

The Times Tourists Visit the Silent Tomb of Cheops--The Great Pyramid

SECTIONAL VIEW OF THE PASSAGES AND AIR CHAMBERS IN THE GREAT PYRAMID AT GIZH, EIGHT MILES FROM CAIRO.

THE TIMES TOUR OF THE WORLD.

CAIRO, Egypt, Feb. 9.—The world's greatest tomb and its greatest mystery. Not even the great pyramid is at once the riddle of the sphinx is more darkly obscure than the riddle of its great neighbor, the pyramid tomb of Cheops, a king who died 4000 years ago. For the riddle of the pyramid isn't a straightforward riddle. It's a riddle of riddles within riddles, a complex and involved battery of riddles. Even after centuries of speculation most of the questions suggested by the great pyramid remain unanswered. We ride out to the pyramid donkeyback. There under the shadow of the great pile we find the camp of an American who has been delving into the mysteries of the pyramid for many years. This high now, but originally was 481

WOMEN INTEND TO HAVE THEIR SAY

The Tacoma Women Voters' Educational association in public session at the Music hall yesterday afternoon bounced A. H. Garretson, the lone man on the executive board just as an object lesson to show what may happen if public officials of the masculine variety do not please the women. Garretson had not done any come before the ladies and be thing. He was as good as he could be, but he was the only man on the board anyway, and the women concluded they would just throw him out, and they did. Garretson was present, and after he saw the way things were going he resigned, and was eliminated gracefully. The women showed a disposition to have a say about matters political. It was given out to the accompaniment of vigorous hand-clapping that all candidates who want to get office under the new recall movement will have to come before the ladies and be looked over. Speeches were made by Mrs. A. E. Shores, who advocated Mayor Fawcett's anti-treating ordinance, and by various women who showed a determination to take a big hand in the local political game.

Weaving Velvet for the King

THE OLD VELVET WEAVER AT HIS LOOM. These are busy days for the velvet weavers in England. This old man is working night and day in the little village of Sudbury, Suffolk county, so that King George and the little satellites that hover around the throne may look sleek and pretty in their knee pants on coronation day, next June. Coronations create an extraordinary demand for velvet, and the weavers who at other times have little to do are rushed to fill the orders. This old man wove the velvet for the cushion upon which the late King Edward knelt while the crown was being pressed on his think dome. Which is some honor in Sudbury.
