

WILL LET PEOPLE DECIDE

Are Tacomans willing that the postoffice shall be closed Sundays to give the carriers a day of rest? The postmaster general has authorized Postmaster Stocking to close the office Sundays if he desires and the matter will be left to the people to determine. There is no delivery of mail by carriers now, but the office is kept open certain hours so citizens can go there and get mail. This requires that the carriers must be on hand just the same and breaks up their Sundays.

If public sentiment favors letting these hard working public servants off for the whole day the office will be closed and they will be free.

The postmaster is waiting to hear from the people.

THE MAN HIGHER UP

The Story of a True American

BY HENRY RUSSELL MILLER

Copyright, 1910, The Bobbs-Merrill Company

"I'm glad of that. I always did like him—he was such a nervy, good-lookin' cuss. An' I always had a notion they got him foul on that convention business somehow," Bob heard Eleanor draw a quick, gasping breath. Impulsively he put out his hand and let it rest on hers for a moment. Haggin discreetly looked the other way.

"He had a kid with him—his sister's—a little girl that—ahem!—that oughtn't to a' been born! It seems as he'd been hittin' it up gay, when he run into his sister. She was sick an' broke, an' he took care o' her till she died. Then he took care o' the kid a while. An' then, I guess, he couldn't stand it no longer, so he brought her over to Miss Flinn."

"Thank God!" breathed Eleanor.

"Yes, ma'am," Haggin agreed politely. "I didn't know this till afterwards. It made me feel sort o' cheap. I don't know as I could a' come back, if I'd been in the same place an' constituted the same. He ain't all piker, Governor. You think so?"

"Guess he intended to stay, if he could square things with you. But on the train he heard some feller say somethin' that made him think he'd be in your way if he stayed. Thought his comin' back'd remind people of that Hemenway business. But when Miss Flinn told him it was me—by his name—was Angel of Charity to them delegates, that changed his mind some. That's why they sent for me."

"He never says a word while I'm rough-housin' him. When I got through, he says, sharp, 'Haggin,' Miss Flinn tells me you straight,' says I. 'What are you goin' to do about it?' He never batted an eye—he ain't a four-flusher, Governor. 'There's just one thing to do,' he says. 'An' we done it!'"

Haggin straightened up triumphantly.

"There won't be so much talk about that convention business, I guess. I took him to a reporter an' he give another interview, tellin' all about that convention an' about how you took the blame that blonged to me. It's a bully story. The reporter got it straight and knew how to write it up. It's in all the mornin' papers. Here it is."

He pulled a newspaper from his pocket and flourished it before Bob's amazed eyes. "I told you I'd get that published straight before I was through," he chuckled.

"And then?" Eleanor suggested. Haggin had almost forgotten her in his interest in his tale. Now he noticed tears in her eyes; he wondered why.

"When we got back to the house, Miss Flinn asked him, 'Will you stay now, Paul?' He didn't say nuthin' for a while. Then he straightened up an' said, 'If Bob will let me.' These was his very words. You'll let him, won't you, Governor? Haggin was very earnest. 'He's been up against a tough game, an' I always did like him an'—if you'd seen him, you'd know. He'll go to hell straight, if you don't keep hold of him. I ain't a preacher, but—"

Bob held out his hand. Haggin took it.

Haggin turned to Eleanor. "Didn't I say he's on the square? He's my kind o' man!"

Then Haggin noted a singular phenomenon. Neither Eleanor nor Bob were paying the least attention to his words. They were both standing, each lost in the other's eyes. He shifted uncomfortably in his chair, then arose, coughing loudly.

"Well, I guess I'll be goin'. If you're goin' down to see him, Governor, I'll meet you at the eleven-forty."

"At the eleven-forty—?" Bob mumbled mechanically. "O yes, of course, the eleven-forty. I'll be there, Tom."

"Well—why, bless me! I nearly forgot. Before I left—I know you'd want to hear about it all an' I told 'em I was comin' up here. An' Miss Flinn said to him, 'Paul, do you know Mrs. Gilbert is with the Dime-deads now?' I was sorry fer him. It had been a tough night fer him an' he was tired an' white as a ghost. He seemed to take a bit, then he said to me, 'Tell Bob to tell Mrs. Gilbert that there is no reason in the world—no reason at all—why I should stand between her and happiness. She will understand.' He made me say it over again. Those was his very words. 'There is no reason in the world why I should stand between her and happiness.'"

Once more Haggin noted that strange forgetfulness of his presence. And if he smiled to himself, at least, being something of a gentleman, he did not let the smile appear.

After a long moment Bob came to his senses to remark:

"Tom, the governor has some very particular, as I have heard. If you will go into the house, the butler will attend to your case."

Tom went.

Bob turned to her. Through the leaves of the vines a shaft of spring sunshine fell upon her face and hair. But it was not the sunshine from above that trans-

They had forgotten death. After a time he remembered. She saw that his thoughts were afar off. She wondered what he was thinking.

He was looking into the years ahead, looking with the sure knowledge of the man who has seen the test applied. He saw the struggle, for he knew the enemy. He saw the temptations fought and overcome, for he knew himself at last. He saw the ultimate victory, for he knew his people. His heart filled with his longing and purpose. He, who had done so little, had received the reward of the faithful servant. Henceforward he would measure his service to the richness of the reward that was his.

She saw his lips move, but no sound fell. She read the words. "Let me serve! Let me serve!" "Ah!" she cried. "You are forgetting me already!"

He looked down into her eyes and drew her more closely to his heart. She was content. "Let us serve!"

The death of Murchell brought to the harassed interests no relief, neither did it bring fear to the people of that state. For both knew that, on guard, between them, stood Bob McAdoo.

THE END.

TACOMA

"The Arcadians" Tonight. Charles Frohman will present "The Arcadians" at the Tacoma theater tonight. "The Arcadians," the latest of musical comedies, comes here with the endorsement of all the critics and the theatergoers in the cities in which it has played. The theme of this piece played, to photograph all babies entered in the contest free of charge. The plot opens in the land of Arcadia, where guile is unknown, and the advent there of James Smith, a London caterer, with a propensity to untruth. The washing of Smith in the Well of Truth and his missionary visit to London are the excuses for three hours of humor and melody.

SCENIC

The baby contest announced for the scenic theater is attracting unusual interest. Any baby not over six years of age is eligible to enter the contest and win one of the prizes offered. The plan is very simple. The Scenic has arranged with Reade's Studio of Photography, 1318 1/2 Pacific ave., to photograph all babies entered in the contest free of charge. Go to the Scenic, secure an entry blank and have the baby photographed. Then take the picture to the theater and hand it to the manager. Starting April 12th every patron will receive a blank ballot good for one vote for any baby whose photo is on exhibition in the lobby. May 1st the baby having the highest number of votes will receive $15 in gold; the next in order $10 in gold and the parents of the third will receive a pass good for two to the Scenic for one year. Information cheerfully furnished on application at the Scenic.

This Home-Made Cough Syrup Will Surprise You

Stops Even Whooping Cough Quickly. A Family Supply at Small Cost.

Here is a home-made remedy that takes hold of a cough instantly and will usually cure the most stubborn case in 24 hours. This recipe makes a pint—enough for a whole family. You couldn't buy as much or as good ready made cough syrup for $2.50. Mix one pint of granulated sugar with 1/2 pint of warm water, and stir 2 minutes. Put 2 1/2 ounces of Pinex (fifty cents' worth) in a pint bottle. Add the Sugar Syrup. This keeps perfectly and has a pleasant taste—children like it. Braces up the appetite and is slightly laxative, which helps end a cough.

You probably know the medical value of pine in treating asthma, bronchitis and other throat troubles, sore lungs, etc. There is nothing better. Pinex is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, rich in gualic acid and all the natural healing pine elements. Other preparations will not work in this formula.

The prompt results from this inexpensive remedy have made friends for it in thousands of homes in the United States and Canada, which explains why the plan has been imitated often, but never successfully.

A guaranty of absolute satisfaction, or money refunded, is made for you with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Fort Wayne, Ind. (Adv.)
