 Wall Street Expert, Editor of "Financial Statistics."
 Fundamental business conditions throughout the United States are exceptionally sound. But, in the past month, the stock exchange has been demoralized. What are the causes? Wall street itself knows full well. Wall street knows its chickens are coming home to roost. Securities have steadily slumped. Brokers' offices are idle; the pit is quiet; the game has almost ceased. And the big masters of big business know they have only themselves to blame. Wall street and its nefarious methods have been partially bared, by various investigations during the past session of congress. The investing public—that keeps Wall street supplied with funds—has discovered some

SOUP AND WATERMELON MAKE STRONG IMPRESSION ON CARTOONIST WEBSTER AS HE LANDS IN FAR-OFF JAPAN

Dear Bill:
 If ever you have occasion to cross the Yellow Sea from Tientsin to Nagasaki, here is a tip: Use an aeroplane. I tried the customary way and it is not a success. Japanese boats on this run are quite small, so, when they take advantage of every little movement, which invariably has a terrible meaning of its own.
 For the first time in my life I was nearly seasick. (No one ever wants to admit that he was down-right sick.)
 A British drummer was the only other passenger, and was in the same condition and couldn't enjoy my sufferings.
 The Jap officers did, though. They were all as pleased as though the company had just whooped their salaries up a notch. It beats all how easily some people are amused.
 News item:—Peaches and watermelons are in full bloom! The restaurants up and down Kyoto's Great White Way are jammed with gay crowds in halting the culent melon. Ever hear a Jap imbbise soup or melon? You will never forget it if you have.

 A Jap can make more startling noises with his mouth than all the spaghetti artists and sword swallowers in darkest America put together.
 Speaking of watermelon suggests a story current in Shanghai. Barbers there have a custom of giving their apprentices watermelons to practice on. The melon is coated with some sort of a fuzzy mixture and the young tonsorial artist gives it a close shave each day.
 Apprentices are also errand boys, so when one receives a call he whacks his razor into the melon and leaves it until he returns.
 A man came into one of these shops one day and fell into the chair of an apprentice. Everything went smoothly until the head barber called him for something.
 You guessed it.
 The other day the Japanese papers printed a story to the effect that the steamer "Shutung" had struck a reef and lost 200 passengers. This was the little boat we made our thrilling trip up the Yangtze in, and, according to the item, it must have been her second trip since we left her.
 Yours,
 WEB.

A Mild Beer

Ever notice the white disc on the sleeves of sailor electricians in the service of Uncle Sam? It looks like a map of the world. The sailor electrician carries all the continents on his sleeve, and longitudes and latitudes.
 What meaneth this emblem? Well, if truth were told, it means that Uncle Sam got what he wasn't looking for once, at least, in history. And the chap who put it over on the long-legged individual with the high beaver hat was only a humble tailor's designer.
 He was told to design a globe and he did. Of course, Uncle Sam meant an electric globe, to show that the boys in the uniforms were sailor electricians. But the tailor stuck to the mundane sphere, and before "your Uncle" knew what happened thousands of badges were already made, and it was too late to order an "electric" globe.
