All Around the Home

Japanned Trays—When a japanned tray becomes old and chipped by giving it two coats of paint and one of enamel, both top and bottom. Stand it on edge to dry after each coat, and you will be delighted with the result. The enamel can easily be renewed at any time. Any roughness should be removed before painting by sandpapering.

A Salad Hint—Tomatoes should always be skinned before being used for salad. To do this easily place the fruit in a basin and pour boiling water over it. Let stand a minute and then drain. You will find that the skin will then come off without any trouble.

Ivory Ornaments—Ivory ornaments may be successfully cleaned in the following way: Rub the stained parts with lemon juice, then with whitening made in a paste with a little lemon juice. Allow this to dry on, and when it is perfectly dry rub off with a soft cloth, or wash off and afterward polish.

Grass Stains—If grass stains on cotton are rubbed with pure alcohol they will quickly disappear. But this should be done as soon as possible after they are made. For claret stains soak the cloth immediately in skim milk, leave it for a little while and wash out in cold water.

Whites of Eggs—To keep the whites of eggs from falling after they have been whipped try adding while whipping, a pinch of cream of tartar. This is usually most effective.

A Useful Hint—Some times when pouring boiling liquid or fellyes into a glass dish the glass breaks. This can be prevented by pressing the bowl of a spoon on the bottom of the dish while it is being filled.

Shoe Polish—When there is no polish to be had lemon juice makes an excellent substitute. A few drops sprinkled on black or tan shoes and rubbed briskly will leave a brilliant shine.

BY MABEL RAY GOODLANDER. "Come, let us live with our children," says Froebel.

CUT-OUTS FOR THE CHILDREN TO COPY AND COLOR; HOW THEY CAN MAKE OTHER PATTERNS THEMSELVES.

Here are some patterns of fall subjects for the children to cut out and color. They can paste them on heavier paper, or can use them as patterns, drawing around them on the paper. Even the very littlest folks can do this work. They can arrange on a large sheet of wrapping paper a flock of birds going south, or a row of apples or autumn leaves. These make very pretty decorations over doors, windows or mantel in the children's room, or wherever in the house convenient. Even better than drawing the leaves is to have the children gather the real autumn leaves, press them between newspapers, and then paste them on strips of paper. I have seen such a pretty border of this-kind made by children all around the wall of their room.

When Prosperity Comes in at the Door, Love Flies out at the Window.

"Poverty," said the Philosophic Lady, "is our greatest moral agent." "Variety," the Novice contributed, "is the spice of life." "It's this way," said the P. L.: "When the husband is poor he spends his evenings at home, his circle of friends is narrow, he visits with his wife at breakfast, at supper and in the evenings. Domestic happiness sticks closer to his home than a mortgage. "But the husband gets money. He goes about more. He increases his number of friends ten-fold. Among these friends there is likely to be a woman who makes his wife look like the faded fragment of a lost dream. Domestic happiness gets a black eye, the house is sold for alimony and some lawyer gets the price of a limousine."

What is the matter with the men and women who write all about love and can't keep it; who weave stories of romance and can't live one; who preach of the ideal and can't practice it? This is the question that every one who follows the news of the day is asking himself. Within the last few years nearly every knight or lady of the pen who has achieved fame from books has cast aside the bonds of matrimony, declaring them too confining, too irritating. Here, for instance, are a few of them: George Randolph Chester, Upton Sinclair, Walter Phelps Dodge, Richard Le Gallienne, Booth Tarkington, Frances Hodgson Burnett, James M. Barrie, Amelle Rivers, Jack London.

What is this "flax of the literary cupid?" Is it "temperament," new thought or just lack of good, common sense that prevents a writer keeping his head in the clouds and his feet in the matrimonial path at one and the same time? "It is none of these," declares Booth Tarkington and Jack London, who have been interviewed on the subject. Jack London says more people "of the ordinary type" would resort to divorce if they could afford it. "But they just go on living out their infelicities for the simple reason that one blanket costs less than two," he says.

Julie Le Gallienne, though, who divorced poet Richard, comes forward with a different and very interesting reason. Here is her view: "Poetic temperament seems to need a frequent change. No poet can remain long married to the same woman." Order Fruit Trees and Shrubbery, Tacoma Implement & Seed Co., 15th and Com.

WALTER WAIT-A-MINUTE It was Saturday morning and Walter's folks usually allowed him to sleep a little later Saturdays. He had been up, though, for an hour and was only half-dressed. "Walter, Walter, hurry a little and get yourself ready," said his father. "All right," said Walter, "just as soon as I finish this story." "What?" said the funny little film-fairy hovering near. "The film-fairy, you know, has the power to make you into a moving picture. He was late at breakfast, which caused his mother to bother and made Jenny the cook more work. Having a late breakfast, he wasn't hungry for luncheon, and when Jenny called him, he said, "Aw, wait a minute, I'm just learnin' how to throw a drop-shot." "Aw," said the film-fairy. "Walter played nearly all afternoon till his father came home. "Don't you want to run over to Uncle Herb's for me?" asked his father. "Wait a minute, Pop. I'm teaching Hero a trick and I mustn't take my eyes off him." "G," said the fairy, "you're it." Now when the film-fairy says "You're it," you find yourself in a moving picture and you don't know whether you're SEEING it or BEING IT. In the snap of a finger, Walter found himself swinging on the end of a long rope from a high bridge. He did not know why he had been on the bridge, but he seemed to know that he had just fallen off and had caught this rope, which swung him side-ways and back, again and again, as if he were the pendulum of a clock. Far below him was the river, so far below that it seemed dead to drop. A patrolman passed along the bridge and looked over the side. "Pull me up, pull me up!" shrieked Walter. "Wait a minute," said the patrolman. "I've got to get the number of an automobile which exceeded the speed limit past here a half an hour ago. As soon as I catch up with it, I'll come back and help you. Don't worry." As he passed on, Walter felt the rope parting, strand by strand. Presently it broke and he gave himself up for dead, but luckily he struck the water right and the water was deep. He felt as if he would never come to the surface, but when he did, he gave a gasp of relief, for quite near him was a boat, in which was an old fisherman lighting his pipe. "Help!" gurgled Walter. "We'll get the rest of the story Monday.
