

THE DEFEAT OF JUDGE HANFORD

The impeachment campaign against Judge Hanford which resulted in forcing him to resign was started by the Seattle Star last August. The Star called a public mass meeting of protest against Hanford's ridiculous injunction against the people of Rainier valley. This meeting attended by five thousand people was addressed by eight prominent citizens and the next day Hanford caused the arrest of six of the speakers, of the Star editors, and of the Star's attorney, John H. Perry.

Subsequently the grand jury emphatically refused to indict the men and the desperate scheme was blocked. But the Star did not stop the impeachment campaign. Attorneys were hired to gather evidence with the result that Hanford after a three weeks' investigation chose to resign rather than face the impending trial before the senate.

SEATTLE, July 22.—Taken by surprise and confronted by the impending congressional scrutiny that would reach to the very bottom of business deals involving Judge C. H. Hanford and the gang behind him, beneficiaries in his court, the gang in self-protection induced him to resign rather than face further disclosures by the impeachment investigation.

This was the overwhelming, impelling cause of Hanford's quitting under fire.

THE GANG FALTERED
As long as Judge Hanford only was concerned, the gang willingly waged his battle. The senate always furnished a ray of hope to Hanford and his backers on the ultimate outcome of the impeachment.

But when the probe began to touch the very vitals of the beast in the judicial jungle then the gang faltered. Then it was that Judge Hanford suddenly discovered that he "could not stand the strain longer," and that he ought to conserve "what little health" he had remaining.

THE GANG HAD HOPES
The gang had up to that time stubbornly hoped against hope that Hanford might yet be saved in spite of the mountain of evidence piled up against him on the charge of drunkenness, on his abuse of the writ of injunction, on his unfairness to poor plaintiffs in personal injury suits, on his allowance of excessive fees in numerous receiverships. The hope was based on the cumbersome nature of impeachment procedure.

But even this meager hope was shattered to fragments when the gang suddenly became aware that it was not Judge Hanford alone who was being threatened by the exposure of the congressional committee, but that the sword of Damascus was hanging over the heads of the most prominent members of the gang as well.

UTTER COLLAPSE
They immediately abandoned the air of bravado that they had laboriously bolstered up. Their hopes for Hanford collapsed utterly. More than that, they feared for themselves.

It suddenly dawned on them last Saturday that the congressional committee would not remain content with a surface investigation. And they covered before the prospect of a probe to the bottom. On Saturday noon, Representative McCoy read into the record the tell-tale decision of Judge Hanford which cut down the taxes of the Northern Pacific by $45,000, not counting the accumulated interest, at the very same time that he was negotiating business deals of great magnitude with the railway officials.

AN UNEXPECTED MOVE
At the very moment that McCoy was reading that decision, the committee's subpoenas were being served upon the law firm of Kerr & McCoy ordering them to bring before the committee all their files relating to the numerous transactions in which they figured in Judge Hanford's court. This included their letters, papers, telegrams, memoranda, and even the original dictation given to their four stenographers.

This move by the congressional committee was the most sensational in the proceedings. It came when the Hanford defense was expecting the investigation to close at any moment.

This together with other developments convinced Hanford's backers that there was no longer any hope of covering up anything. The desperate scheme of Big Business to shield the judge had failed, and rather than face the revelations which they knew were forthcoming, they agreed that Hanford should quit, and Hanford was willing.

BEAUTY OF FACE AND FIGURE

It is with beauty as with anything else, the finishing touch can make or mar. Beauty of face and figure is not preserved without attention to details. Most important to the face is the care of the hair. Give it its natural luster and elasticity with a seafoam shampoo, followed by sun-drying. Sun-drying catches the gold. It can be used at home by anyone. A teaspoonful dissolved in a teacup of hot water is sufficient and will remove dust and dandruff, also relieve the irritation of hot weather. Shampoo thoroughly, rub well into the scalp with the tips of the fingers and follow with at least three good rinsings. If you are particular you will enjoy the effect as well as the refreshing feeling of having the air circulating freely around the roots. Ask any druggist and it will be supplied or ordered for you.
