A Beautiful Evening Gown Most Exquisite Conception

After all, the most exquisite creation of the modiste is the perfectly fashioned evening dress with all its soft, clinging folds and graceful lines. A capital illustration presents itself in the accompanying picture which is a real delight to the artistic eye that catches line and design and draping imperceptibly. And yet the whole costume is simple and might be built out of medium priced materials. While the panier drapery over the hip gives coquetry to this delicate gown, the arrangement of the sash of black net lends dignity and length of line. It is draped over one shoulder and arm and falls straight down the back, being caught against the skirt under a bead embroidered ornament. The dress itself is made of white charmeuse—soft, fine material suitable for an evening gown—might be substituted. It is trimmed with the bead embroidered motifs and bead fringe. The black velvet hat with its smart trimmings adds contrast.

Cynthia Grey's Answers

CANT A FELLOW BE A FRIEND? Dear Miss Grey: I am 22 years of age and have been "keeping company" with a girl of 18 for about a year. For various reasons I am not considering marriage. Now, am I doing an injustice to be no more than a friend? I have not mentioned matrimony, and it would be rather embarrassing to tell her of my "intentions," as that would be presuming she was in love with me. In so many of the letters written to you by girls, they say they have been "keeping company with a young man" for different lengths of time, and apparently take it for granted that they are practically engaged. Can't a fellow be a friend to a girl and see her once or twice a week and take her out to places of amusement, without being under obligations to marry her? I would like to hear the girls' ideas on this question. INQUISITOR. A.—Yes, a man can be a friend and take a girl to amusements and call and I do not believe any sensible girl will consider herself engaged; but when he makes love and expects the privileges of an engaged man she thinks him honest, and has faith enough in him to believe he means what he says by his actions, if not in actual words. Be honest with yourself and the girl, and you will have nothing to regret.

THE AFFINITY DISEASE Dear Miss Grey: We are two married ladies of same age. Both have been married over five years. We are not satisfied with our husbands. Miss Grey, we both have another fellow whom we think will be very good to us and we love them very much. Our husbands are good to us in many ways; but we have to spend our evenings at home while they go out with other company. What shall we do about it? Shall we leave our husbands for these other fellows, who are home-loving men; or shall we stick with our husbands? HOME LOVERS. A.—I know of nothing that will make a woman dissatisfied with her husband, or a husband tired of his wife, quicker than the affinity disease. We can always find good (?) reasons for the things we want to do, and excuses for those we do not. And I know the affinity craze is responsible for a great many unhappy homes. Because your husbands do not do right is no reason you should do wrong; and not until men and women learn what honor means in marriage will we have good homes, good children, and a good nation. These men of whom you speak are not home lovers, or they would not try to break up your homes, and they have not your good at heart, or they would not encourage you to dishonor your homes by associating with them, unknown to your husbands.

HAVE TO ENTERTAIN HIM ON THE STREET Dear Miss Grey: I am a working girl about 17 and have always worked on and made my own way till now, and I am staying home. I have a stepfather who is not good to me. I am keeping company with a young man of 20. He is an electrician. He is very kind to me. My home is not such as to entertain him. It is so humble. And my stepfather won't allow it, so I have to entertain him on the street. It makes me feel bad to think I can't treat him the same as he does me. He seems to like me very much. I got acquainted with him at a hotel waiting on table. I would like to get a good place working. Would like to get a place in a doctor's office. I haven't a very good education. I would like a place here in town, if you could find one for me. I always wanted to train as a nurse; but have changed my mind. BROWN EYES. A.—My girl, the best place for you is in a good private family where they will treat you right. I judge from your letter that you are inexperienced. Wherever you entertain your friend, on the street, or in the home, do not allow him to be familiar. This man may be honest, but often a man seems to be very fond of a girl to the girl's everlasting sorrow. I wish I could tell you of a good place. If you will go to F. W. C. A. and tell them the circumstances, I am sure they will help you get work.

THINGS WE WOULD TELL OUR MOTHERS Dear Miss Grey: We are two girls of 14 and 15 years. We are not sisters, but very great friends. One of us has a father, but the other has neither father nor mother and is living with her aunt. Now, Miss Grey, it isn't very easy to tell fathers and aunts things that we would tell our mothers if we had one, so we are writing to you for advice. We are very much in love. Would you please tell us some good books to read? We thank you very much in advance and hope you will not think us foolish. Please answer as soon as you can. TWO MOTHERLESS GIRLS. A.—Love at 14 and 15 is not the same as it is in later years, and if you girls will send me your address and ask any question you wish, just as you would your mothers, if you had them, I will answer each one privately and truthfully. Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm, by Kate Douglas Wiggin; Anne of Green Gables, by L. M. Montgomery, and Uncle William, by Jeanette Lee, are dandy books for girls your age.

DON'T APPROVE OF WOMEN RUNNING FOR OFFICE Dear Miss Grey: To settle a dispute, will you kindly tell us the proper way to hang stockings, by the top or the foot? We would also like to have your readers' opinion of women running for office, such as governor. We would like to have your opinion, too. We don't approve of it ourselves. Thanking you. S. E. C. I. M. B. A.—Hang your stockings by the toe, except on Christmas Eve. It depends on the women who run for office. Women in general are more conscientious, and if one runs for governor who has this trait, is well informed, and has executive ability and the good of the people at heart, I see no reason why she should not be elected.

KIDDIKEE, LOWDGE, AND HIBBERTOO, HER FRIENDS

JOAN MAUDE, and some of her strange friends, as our artist draws them—but not at all as Joan sees them, OF COURSE.

Joan Maude's little book, "Behind the Night Lights," has just been published by John Murray, one of England's most prominent publishers, and even the biggest literary folks in England are reading it. And no wonder! Joan is less than 4 years old. She can't read or write. And what's more, she doesn't realize that she is an authoress. When Joan was less than 3 years old she began to talk to her mother of a queer lot of creatures whom she numbered among her fanciful friends. There was the "Kiddikee" and the "Hitchpenny" and the "Lowdgie" and the "Hibbertoo."

Of these and 17 other animals Joan was almost continually talking to her mother, telling her what they said, what they did, what they looked like and what recent adventures they had passed through. Joan's "Lowdgie" is an extremely interesting and wondrous creature. She told her mother this about it, never once, during a whole year, changing her description: "He's purple and ugly. He runs very fast; faster than doggie; quicker than the hare. He throws his legs up very high. He has only two legs, but there is a large space between each. His toes are turned up when he runs, and he turns them down when he has finished. He likes to run along the little streams because he can never catch them."
