Butch Belford. To this bland, phlegmatic young man goes all the credit for the winning of the Tigers yesterday. He is the hero of the hour—and justly so.

For, besides pitching airtight ball, he batted in the runs that turned defeat to victory in the ninth inning. That ninth inning finish was one of the kind you read about but, alas! so seldom see.

The Portland players started things off at the jump. After Girot, who started the game, had disposed of a couple, Fries singled through short. On the hit-and-run play Cunningham awaited to right, where Cy Neighbors kicked the sphere until Fries scored. In the second the Colts came back for more and got 'em.

Williams and Guigni both died, but Bliss was passed. Callahan whacked a vicious hit Lou Nordyke couldn't handle. Everybody safe. Then Dave Bancroft pinged one down the third alley for three cushions. Three runs in all, and all Portland made; but they seemed enough for awhile. Belford relieved Girot, after the second inning.

In inning number two the Bengals became somewhat busy themselves. Kennedy clouted a mighty three-bagger into right and pattered over on Ruell's hit to center. McMullin laid one down, and Grindle scratched an infield hit on which Ruell counted. And that was all for the Tigers until the ninth.

Gloom had settled upon the Tacoma fans when the ninth rolled around, for the tail end of the list was coming up. Ruell started nicely by waiting out Eastley, who had replaced Callahan in the seventh, on four wide ones. McGinley then wisely jerked McMullin and sent Sport Harris in to bat. Sport poked one down the third base line for a bag—the first ball he hit in the Northwest-ern league. Grindle bunted and Eastley was too excited to pick it up. Seeing no one was out from sending Conroy in to bat for Butch, and let the pitcher go in himself.

Belford hoisted the ball over Mohler's head, two runs came over, and the Tigers had won their fourth consecutive victory.

have an edge over the game Seattle lad, but friends of Billy say that he will bring home the bacon. It is an undoubted fact that Ballieu has greatly improved since he broke into the game some months ago, and lately he has been going like a world beater. In his last fight he disposed of Battling Wolf in jigtime.
