SNOW WHITE

AS TOLD BY AUNT GERTIE.

A wise old witch who lives in a wonderful cave changes the queen into a pedlar woman.

CHAPTER III.

Just as Snow-white was beginning to think everything was safe and that the queen had forgotten her, an idea drifted into the queen's mind that she would like to hear her magic mirror tell her once more that she was the fairest woman in the world. She came to the mirror and said: "Looking glass upon the wall Who is fairest of us all?" The glass replied: "Queen, thou art of beauty rare, But Snow-white, living in the glen,

With the seven little men, Is a thousand times more fair." The queen was very, very surprised and awfully angry, for she was sure that she had eaten the heart of poor little Snow-white many days before. She wondered and wondered how she could manage to find Snow-white and kill her. Then she thought of a way. She went to a witch and asked her to change her into an old pedlar woman. In this disguise she started out to the woods to find Snow-white. She discovered the little dwarfs' house and knocked at the door. "Fine wares to sell! Fine wares to sell!" she said.

Snow-white saw her, thought she looked very harmless and opened the door to her, despite the warning the dwarfs had given her.

"What a figure you are, child," she said. "Come let me put a new lace in your stays." Snow-white thought this quite reasonable and stood for the old woman to lace her up. Instead of doing it properly, the woman pulled the strings so tightly that Snow-white lost her breath and fell in a faint on the floor.

"Now you are done for," said the wicked queen, hurrying away home. Snow-white lay on the floor like a dead girl until the seven little dwarfs came home at sundown. When they saw her on the floor, lifeless-looking, they rushed in, unfastened her tight clothing, threw water in her face and gradually brought her back to life. As soon as she could listen to them, Snow-white learned from her kind protectors that the old pedlar woman was no other than her cruel step-mother, the queen.

"Next time," they said to her, "mind what we tell you. Don't let anyone into the house. Again Snow-white promised solemnly to be most careful and again the little dwarfs went off to their gold-digging in the woods. The queen, thinking she had ended the life of the little girl, surely, this time, rushed home to her magic mirror, saying: "Looking glass upon the wall, Who is fairest of us all?" Instead of giving the answer she expected, the mirror gave back to her the same reply it had given her the last time.

"Why, is Snow-white still alive?" asked the queen to herself, blue with rage and disappointment. "Then I will surely make away with her this time for good and all."

Determined to get rid of her beautiful little rival, the queen poisoned the teeth of a comb by magic, dressed up like a different sort of old woman and went to the house in the woods again. This time it was much harder for her to make Snow-white think she was just a kind, good, old woman. But her gentle voice and sly manners tricked the poor little girl again and she opened the door, letting the queen in. As soon as the woman got inside she told Snow-white to let her comb her hair and make it look beautiful. Because she was proud of her beautiful curls, Snow-white thought she would let the stranger arrange it for her. As soon as the poisoned comb touched the girl's hair she fell senseless to the floor. The queen ran away home, sure this time that she would never have to worry about Snow-white again.

Probably the beautiful little girl would have been lying there still if the dwarfs hadn't come home as usual and found her. As soon as they pulled the comb out of her hair she woke up and was well again. The dwarfs were very angry with her for not doing as they had told her and warned her once more to keep the door locked all the time.

Did she do as they asked, do you think? Well, wait and see.

Letters To Cynthia Grey

Wild Oats.
Dear Miss Grey: I should like to ask your advice in a matter that has been troubling me for some time. I am a young lady 22 years old, and am engaged to a young man 32. His past is not what it should have been, and my folks are continually bringing it up to me. Since I have been going with him he has worked every day. He has a nice position and likes his work. Even my relatives, who are the ones who know about his past, see a great change in him, and have even remarked about it. I have always lived at home, and am the only girl left. My parents seem to think there is no one good enough for me, but I think different. Perhaps my friend's past has not been just what it should have been, but I am perfectly sure he is all over that now. Every man has to sow his wild oats some time, and it is better to do so before you are married than afterward. He does not care for liquor, and I think that is one of the most essential things to consider before you marry. He is good-hearted, and would do anything for me or any of my people. He does not know that my folks do not think much of him. If he did it would hurt him, as he thinks a great deal of my mother, and she treats him very nice. I hope you can advise me, as I am very anxious for your opinion, as you always give everyone such good advice. What I wish to know is: If a man has been wild once, and is now making good, would it not be just as well to boost and help him all you can, instead of always bringing up his past? I shall look forward to your reply, and thanking you for your trouble, I am M. D.

Warts.
Dear Miss Grey: I am a constant reader of your letters and good answers and so am asking you a favor. Please tell me what to do to get rid of warts. My little girl has thirteen on one hand and five or more on the other. Will you please tell me what to do, and is there anything to do? I have begun to use carbolic acid on them; is this all right? Anxiously waiting for hear from you. I remain A READER.

Which One?

Dear Miss Grey: I am a reader of your letters and also want some advice. I was going with a young man who has now been away for several months. I have been writing to him and at the same time going with another young man. He will be home soon, and what I want to know is, which one should I keep company with, as I like one as well as the other and am not the foolish kind. CLOVER.

A.—As you are not engaged to either, there is nothing as far as I can see to prevent you from going with both. A girl or boy may have as many friends as he or she wishes, and because they go together once or twice does not give them a mortgage on each other.

SOCIETY

Teachers of the Annie Wright seminary entertained yesterday afternoon for patrons and friends. A number of the teachers will leave the institute this year to take positions in other schools. The party was in the nature of a farewell tea.
