The Confessions of a Wife

CHAPTER 189.
(Copyright, 1914, by the Newspaper Enterprise Association.)

That Mollie girl is a constant source of amusement and concern to me. She is so full of life—so anxious to abstract all the fun and joy from every day.

She bubbles out with laughter, and is constantly on the lookout for a new way of extracting pleasure from every waking moment.

In her anxiety to have a good time she often plays a joke on herself, and her sense of humor is great enough to laugh at her own discomfiture.

Mollie is one of those girls that all the men like, and she can "take her own where she finds it."

Yesterday she and I were downtown on a shopping trip. I found that my bridal finery of over a year was getting rather passe.

While we were at luncheon at one of the department stores a nice looking boy came up to us and asked, with much interest, about Mollie's health. I must have looked surprised as she shot me a demure glance from under those long lashes of hers that made me sit up and take notice of "the way of a maid with a man."

"Oh, I am much better now, Margie wanted me to help her do some shopping and I thought perhaps I would not hurt."

"You do look better than you did last night," said the boy solicitously—he was such a nice boy.

"You looked so pale last evening that I have been kicking myself all day for staying a minute with you." And then he added with a little embarrassed smile: "I sent you some more flowers this morning?"

"Did you?" said Mollie with a lovely smile. "They must have come after I left. It was sweet of you. I love flowers, whether I am sick or well."

The boy wanted to linger longer, but he knew he must go, and so he bade us good-bye.

"Who is that nice chap, Mollie?" I asked.

"Henry Hamilton," she answered, and then she began to laugh and "fess up."

"Margie, I am very fond of Henry. We have been good pals ever since our childhood days when he licked the school bully for annoying me. He called me up on the phone and said he would like to come up last evening, and I told him to come on. Just a little while afterward George Ransome telephoned that a party was going out for a little ride in his car and asked me to go along.

"I would have more fun with the party, so I promptly accepted and then tried to get Henry on the phone. Could not reach him until six o'clock, and then I told him I was too sick to see him.

"He answered he would just come up for a moment. He was so concerned about my health that he made me feel awfully mean for deceiving him.

"I hardly had time to powder my face and make myself pale

What They Ask Gertie Grey

Dear Miss Grey: I am so very unhappy over a little girl-wife who is a little past 17 years of age.

There is always two sides to a story, but she came to me with her side. She has no love for her husband, who to me appears a very good man, only he has been a poor provider. Now, I have taken her to stick to the right path; but it is so very very useless. Nothing I can say helps. That is why I am writing to you. If she wouldn't tell me what she does, probably I wouldn't feel so; but she does, and with no sense of shame.

It hurts me and makes me feel so awful weak not to be helping her; but I feel so helpless with another woman daring her on to drinking, dancing, drinking, smoking and other men seems to make up her life.

I wish you could help to do something and do it in the right way, for I am utterly helpless. Please answer soon. You know how you would feel if placed as I and the girl whom I love being made lower and lower.

A HELPLESS FRIEND.

A.—Yes, I do know how you feel, for I have been placed just where you are. My heart has ached for girls who would not listen. I have come to the conclusion that this heart-aching stunt does not help them.

A woman of the underworld who had come up by her own efforts and was established in business once said to me:

"Miss Grey, a few of the girls living that life might be persuaded to reform; but in order to come out of it they must be ready to make an effort themselves. Then when they are ready, they should be given a fair show."

If respect for herself, her home and her husband will not stop this girl, if you love and entreaty will not, she will have to learn this particular lesson all over again. Let her know that you stand ready to help her when she is willing to help herself. And remember that the real, true womanhood of the girl is still there, but hidden by this false idea of pleasure.

Dear Miss Grey: Will write a few lines regarding "Worried Father's" appeal for advice and employment. Now, if he is sober and industrious and familiar with ranch work, or can learn readily, I do not think he would find any difficulty in finding nearly if not quite continuous work for the summer and fall in the Yakima valley. There is now a shortage of good help and will be all summer. Just now, apple thinning is in order, which can be done by women and children. Then will come peach, prune and pear picking and packing, and then the hop and apple crop.

It is nothing uncommon for girls to can pack apples for cards from $3 to $5 per day. I have two girls who often do it. This, however, requires practice. Would not like to advise, however, as he would probably have to live in a tent through the hot weather. If his prospects are no brighter and he can write me, or better still, come over here to see for himself. I will either answer his letter or meet him at train and see what I can do for him.

I do not need any more help than I have, but believe I could place him with some of the neighbors. I have no time to waste on "hoopsters." If he concludes to come, he had better come to Granger on N. P. and inquire for Howard Thompson, Granger, Wash.

Dear Miss Grey: I wrote you a letter some time ago that I am afraid has been misunderstood. I do not mean to slur or criticize moving picture actors or actresses, but I do think there are other players besides Mary Pickford who are just as good if not better and who deserve just as much praise and boosting.

Personally, I don't care

Half the Battle Is Getting Started

This applies most particularly to savings. A savings account once started the battle is half won.

The finishing is by far the easier half. A savings account is your best friend and if you keep adding to it regularly and persistently, in turn, it will take care of you.
