Welsh Was Speaker

CENTRALIA, Dec. 7.—John T. Welsh of South Bend delivered the chief address at the lodge of Elks yesterday in memory of departed members.

Oh, Millicent! Pipe the Prince of Wales Officering the Big Soldiers!

How the next king of England looks at the front. At that, if he is little, he's got nerve, because, after bucking Kitchener a long time, he's at last managed to get to the battle front in France.

HERO COOK RISKS LIFE FOR BEANS

(Continued From Page One.) upon that part of the German forces, the Fifty-first had suffered terrible losses. One-third of the men who had come from the smaller cities and from the South Prussian villages were left dead or wounded upon the field when the line was forced back, yielding but refusing to break. Three times they had held their shallow trenches against the assaults of infantry, and twenty hours they had hugged the ground under the terrible rain of shell and shrapnel.

Then the pressure along the front on the German army had relaxed and shifted to the westward, and the Fifty-first and its supporting regiments had a breathing spell, during which they dropped rifles and picked up interlocking tools to strengthen their positions.

During this lull fighting Schmetkeop had remained at his little field kitchen, cooking. His chief had fallen, hit by a bit of shell, and Schmetkeop, with one slightly wounded private, attempted to feed the men in the trenches. During the afternoon he had the luck to find a treasure in a great tin of beef dropped from some wagon, and dumping this treasure trove into his big field kettle and adding a dozen pea sausages, he bore water and prepared a big hot meal for his soldiers.

Suddenly and without warning the center of the battle storm swung back, and with a rush the French infantry came charging over the trenches. The Germans were borne back. For half a mile the German line yielded, but would not break, while the cannon on the hill behind poured its tons of metal upon the enemy. The Fifty-first found its position untenable and was ordered to retire to position under the guns, and supporting them. Reinforcements were being rushed up. A snow squall had struck the armies and the fight was in a flurry of white, with the sun just sinking.

Uncle Sam Probe Alleged Piracy Plot

STEAMER SACRAMENTO, flying the American flag, the cargo of which was alleged to have been captured by German cruisers off the coast of Chile recently. The case is now under investigation by Federal authorities. If it is true that this vessel's cargo was captured the act constitutes piracy. The Chilean government is also conducting an investigation into the matter. J. O. Davis, collector of port at San Francisco, the harbor from which the ship sailed, will shift the charge of the Chilean government, that the German war vessels have established a naval base in the ocean off the South American coast and that the "taking" of the Sacramento's cargo was merely part of the plan by which the German Pacific fleet receives supplies.
