Personal and Social

"Is the Modern Church Cowardly?" will be discussed by M. R. Marvin before his class in Applied Christianity at First Methodist church Sunday evening.

Homesteaders' lodge of Puyallup will celebrate the 9th birthday anniversary of the supreme lodge with a pie and shadow social in K. of P. hall, Friday evening. Tacoma friends are invited.

Mrs. Cynthia Bates entertained in her home in South Tacoma at a charming dinner party in honor of Mrs. Marie Olson yesterday.

Rev. C. Y. Crimes, Rev. Dr. Webb, Rev. W. L. Cullen and Mr. L. G. Drake attended the "Quiet Day" held at St. Mark's church, Seattle, Monday. Bishop Keator delivered three powerful addresses. A luncheon was served in the rectory.

Thimble teas are rapidly coming to the force in Tacoma's society homes, forcing even the merry pastime, bridge, into an early decadence. Thirty thimbles piled busily this afternoon in the home of Mrs. Ralph T. Bretz, clinking betimes against daintiest china containing potions of brewed leaves. Mrs. Bretz entertained today in honor of Mrs. M. F. Pugsley, who will soon leave Tacoma for her new home at Yelm.

The annual banquet will be served Monday at the College of Puget Sound for 300 invited guests.

Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority alumnae will hold their monthly spread in Rhodes Brothers' tea room.

Parent-Teachers' circle of Stadium High school will meet this evening at 8 o'clock. Fathers are especially invited.

An entertainment consisting principally of musical numbers will be given this evening by the Parent-Teachers' circle of Sheridan school.

Troop B cavalry, Washington National Guard, has bidden 1,500 to a military ball in the Armory Monday night.

Mrs. A. P. Johnson left Tuesday for Los Angeles, where her husband, Dr. Johnson, is seriously ill.

CYNTHIA GREY'S LETTERS

Q.—I have never had the courage to write you before, but just read something in your columns that urges me on. It is this: "The best thing in life is spending it with those we really care for."

Do you mean even if your heart is breaking at the way you are treated in return? I do not believe many husbands treated a wife as shamefully as I was treated until I took my baby and left a couple of years ago.

I know he was sincere in wanting us back and he promised never to illtreat me again. I came back. He is very kind and thoughtful of us, has never abused me again, but, oh, I believe I would prefer abuse instead of what he has been doing ever since. He is living almost entirely with another woman.

He is so fond of our little boy and the baby idolizes his father, and if he does not love me as I would like to be loved, I know he respects me above any other woman he knows and that is some consolation.

But this is what I want your advice about: Shall I leave again? I am a coward about going out in the world again. I know how hard it was before. Or shall I stay and let him help me raise our boy?

If I stay I must change my ways. I must learn how to laugh and sing like I used to. I want to pretend I am contented, but it chokes me when I try to smile. I want to make it pleasant so he will like it as well here as there.

I am afraid this letter is too long, but if you can answer it, I will be thankful. I am, ANONYMOUS.

A.—Whether you go or stay, if your husband really loves your boy, he will see that he is well provided for. And if he won't do so willingly, there are laws which will remind him of his obligations. The question is purely one of honor. Do you think it is more honorable for you to stay and rear your son with a father who is void of all honor; or to take him away where you will at least have a chance to raise him to respectable manhood? It means a great sacrifice on your part either way you turn, and as a wife and mother you are the only one capable of deciding.

Q.—I am a middle-aged man and a member of several prominent clubs. The greater number of my friends know me by a nickname. Does a nickname lower a person's dignity or is it an evidence of friendship? I am about to go into business and prefer to be known and called by my christian name. Advise how I can get my friends to use it without losing their friendship. P. N.

A.—A nickname devised by friends is intended for a compliment. Instead of correcting your friends—always a risky undertaking—make the nickname an asset. A descriptive nickname has often proved as valuable to a man in business as any advertised trade mark could possibly be.

Q.—Will you please tell me how a young girl should act to show a young man she would like his steady company? Also, how should a young lady act towards a young man after he has quit her and is going with one of her girl chums? TWO GIRLS.

A.—It is not necessary in either case for the girl to assume an unnatural attitude. Self-respecting, since girls do not overstep the bounds of convention to keep steady company with a man. If he desires her company, it is an easy matter for him to find out if she favors his attentions.

Q.—My husband and self have been interested readers of "Confessions of a Wife," since its beginning in your paper. We are soon leaving the city for a long trip and would like very much to get the story in book form if possible. Can we? MRS. S.

A.—As yet the "Confessions of a Wife" has not been published in book form and can be had only as it comes in serial form in the Times.

Confessions of a Wife

(Copyright, 1914, by Newspaper Enterprise Association)
"Margie, Mr. Hatton, Pat, and 'Mother Nora,' as he calls her, were over to our house last night."

Mollie and I were looking at rooms in a quiet family hotel. Mother Waverly wanted Mollie to look at two or three places and then she would come and see if the one that pleased Mollie pleased her. Mollie asked me to go with her.

"They all liked the house very much. Mr. Hatton wants to furnish my room and mother's, which you know opens into it, as his study and bedroom. He says the house is just what they want; that he has always wanted a place that had been lived in, that rich people's houses were only museums of rare works of art, not homes.

"Mother apologized for the worn places in the rug on the living room floor and he said: 'Mrs. Waverly, that is one of the things I am taking your house for. Housefurnishings are only rags and pieces of wood until they are hallowed and worn by those we love. You see I have never known this kind of a house and I'm going to be happier here than I have ever been in my life.'"

"I believe it, I believe it, Chad, my boy," said Pat and that dear Mother Nora went over to him before us all and kissed him."

"I can't see," I remarked, "that you lack love to any great extent with the fuss that Mr. Sullivan and his mother make over you."

"I could not live without Mother Nora," he said tenderly as he patted her hand.

"He is going to have a grand piano in the living room. Pat says he plays better than Pederecki and he has promised to invite us all over there some night and play for us."

"My dear girl, you must remember we do not have much time and we must make up our minds about the place you are going to live in instead of imagining the comfort Mr. Hatton will have in the home you are going to leave," Mollie laughed.

She is a wholesome, whole-souled girl who can see a joke on herself. She looked up at me in consternation and whispered: "You don't think I am in love with my boss, do you?"

"Well, since you ask me I should say you have all the symptoms."

"But I don't want to be in love with him."

"Why not?"

"Because—because—because I am afraid he doesn't love me."

Then it was my turn to laugh. "Don't laugh, Margie, wouldn't it be perfectly terrible to fall in love with someone who did not love you?"

"No, my dear. I think it the most wonderful thing in the world to love someone no matter whether the one you love returns it, or not. Loving builds up character and ideals; being loved only gratifies one's pride and adds to one's selfish enjoyment."

"To hear you talk, Margie, one would think you had loved someone who did not love you before you loved Dick."

"I did."

"Tell me about it," said Mollie in an awed tone of voice.

"That's all there is to it, my dear. I fell in love with a man who was already in love with another girl, although at the time I did not know it."

"Were you not unhappy when you discovered it?"

"I certainly was. I thought for a while I did not care to live. I said to myself: 'My life is blighted.'"

"For a time I was very unhappy, but one morning I awoke to find the sun shining and the ache gone from my heart."

"It was then I learned and learned thoroughly: 'All things shall pass' for I love Dick much more than I could have done had I never loved the other man."

"But, Margie, you don't believe love will pass?"

"Yes, dear. I do believe that the ecstatic, unreasoning desire we call romantic love will pass, but something else will take its place. I hope something better, more enduring, more in keeping with everyday life."

"But do you see, it going? Don't you try to keep it?"

"Most of us do, dear, just as we try to keep youth or flowers or a strain of music or any other glorious thing that life gives us but we can't keep it, dear."

"What a terrible belief. I should not think you would be happy a minute."

"I am happy—happier perhaps than others who do not understand how fleeting are all our joys and sorrows. Time gives them to us and Time takes them away, all one can do is to enjoy life, its pleasures—yes and its griefs to the fullest."
