POINDEXTER SWATS THE REACTIONARIES

Any feeling that Miles Poindexter's return to the republican party might mean he had lost a part of his progressiveness was set at rest today in a statement which he sent The Times, in answer to criticisms which have been made of his course. Senator Poindexter said: "I appreciate the liberal attitude of those who are sincerely desirous that the republican party should be again accepted by the people as the agent of popular government."

"I do know that James H. Davis and Guy E. Kelly defend and endorse the rascality of the Aberdeen and Chicago conventions of 1912, the reactionary record of the last legislature, and anything else of old style political methods. I do not, and am not surprised that they oppose me. "A party is what its members make it, and there has been no evidence heretofore that the republican party embraces their reactionary views. The more than four million votes cast for progressive principles in 1912 did not indicate it. Under some leaders the republican party has been quite a different force from what it was under other leaders. Under Lincoln or Roosevelt its policy and actions were quite different from what they were under Taft. I am not seeking the republican nomination with any idea whatever of accepting the leadership or the political views of the standpat political element they represent. I do not claim to be regular in that sense. "As to the tariff, I am for protection, and for a tariff commission. There is a record of the votes which I cast in the effort as far as possible, to carry out the republican tariff plans of 1908 and many other years. But that will be fully discussed later on."

TWILIGHT SLEEP

Mrs. R. E. Tenner and her "Twilight Sleep" baby, Emille Jane Tenner. Emille Jane was two months old when this picture was taken, and she weighed 12 ounces. At birth she weighed 7 and 1-4 pounds. She is a very vigorous babe, and in perfect health. She sleeps all night, never awakening for feedings as do most babies of her age.

(Editor's Note.—This is the first of three interviews with Dr. Francis H. Wakefield, San Francisco, an authority on "Twilight Sleep," or "painless childbirth," in which the use and effects of scopolamin, the new anesthetic in obstetrics, are explained in detail. Dr. Wakefield has treated 70 "twilight sleep" cases, and his highly successful use of scopolamin is being carefully watched throughout the medical world.)

WHAT IS SCOPOLAMIN?

Scopolamin, the drug used to induce what has been termed the twilight sleep, is derived from the dried roots of a plant found in the mountains of Bavaria and Hungary. It comes in the form of crystals, and is an alkaloid having the same chemical formula and bearing close relation to hyoscyne, a drug quite commonly used in medical practice.

This semi-conscious state can be kept up more or less indefinitely by the occasional repetition of the drug in small doses. The amount of scopolamin given the patient to keep her in the twilight sleep, or amnesia, can be administered with perfect safety. Experiments have shown that the oxydric or poisonous qualities of the drug are extremely low. Not Dangerous. The thing to be most carefully considered in giving the drug is against doses so heavy as to put the patient into a sleep deep enough to check the labor process. The average dose of scopolamin given in many hospitals is 1-125th of a grain at a time, or perhaps

1-50th of a grain during the entire period of childbirth.

The general experimentation of those using scopolamin has demonstrated that the drug is without any bad immediate or after effects upon mother or infant.

Twilight Sleep. The condition induced by scopolamin when applied in obstetrical doses is one in which the brain recognizes impressions through its subconscious, or deeper half of the mind, but which are not recorded on the conscious or upper mind.

In the semi-conscious state, the patient sleeps between the spasms, rouses momentarily during the labor periods and then goes back into that delicate slumber which the expert use of scopolamin is able to maintain hour after hour until the ordeal is completed.

Sometimes the patient speaks of the pains or indicates in other ways that she is momentarily conscious of them, but almost instantly will follow some remark wholly irrelevant, showing that the pain has been discarded and forgotten even while it is being felt.

At the end, if the treatment has been properly carried out, she has absolutely no recollection of suffering. In other words, she perceives pains momentarily during labor, but does not apprehend or remember them. (To be continued tomorrow.)

SEATTLE, April 22.—Preparations for a busy wind-up campaign for signatures on the referendum petitions against certain laws passed by the last legislature were laid at a meeting of the Central Labor Council following the regular weekly meeting of that body last night.

THAT PANTAGES PRESS AGENT MUST BE A NUT ON BASEBALL

The press agent guy at Pantages theater saw a baseball game this week, and got so enthusiastic over the game that he mixed his metaphors slightly in writing about the new vaudeville show.

"Here's what he put over today: "The game is on at Pantages and there are some hitters in the lineup. Beeman and Anderson lead off every day with a double that brings the bleachers to their feet, and while they are "skating round the bases" the "Dollies" come up to bat with a clean double that sings and dances through the air like a skyrocket.

"Dolen and Leuharr do some great comedy on the coaching line. Beeman attempts a double steal. Gerlie covers ground fast with her singing, and brother plays a snappy game at the piano.

"With two on and nobody out, Tom Kelly comes to bat, slams out a new joke, and makes a home run. It's a good game, and it gets more ginger when the Reed brothers, strong men, put across some big-league stuff in getting to first on line drives.

"If you want to root, go to the Pantages this week. It's a winning team."

Miss Wade, one of the "Dollies," who have a feature act on the Pantages bill this week.

(Editor's Note.—This is the fifth installment of "A Short History of the American Navy," published by "The World's Work" in its series on American defenses.)

BY JOHN M. OSKISON, CHAPTER V.

But the Barbary pirates proved to be only one of the annoyances to our merchant shipping. Between 1795 and 1798, when England and France were at war, it became the favorite game of the crews of both these nations to hold up and capture American ships, on the most pretext; and in 1798 the French raiders had become so bold as to make captures of American merchant ships in our harbors—ostensibly to prevent them from carrying contraband of war to England.

Again congress was roused to action. "A number of vessels not exceeding twelve" were authorized, and on April 30, 1798, the office of secretary of the navy was created, and Benjamin Stoddert of the District of Columbia was chosen to fill it. The three frigates abandoned in 1796 were ordered completed, and a marine corps was created.

Not a formidable navy was this second; 12 ships of not less than 32 guns; 12 of between 20 and 24 guns; 6 not exceeding 18 guns, and some galleys and revenue cutters. But when the first of them came off the ways and put to sea insurance rates on American cargoes fell off 50 per cent.

Captain Truxtun, of the Constitution, in February, 1799, fought the French frigate Insurgente in the Caribbean and proved the worth of Humphreys' design. Though both frigates were rated at 38 guns, the American's broadside was fully one-third heavier than the Frenchman's; also, Humphreys' ship fairly outlasted the other. In these cruisers our naval force gained a most valuable training. Our vessels had co-operated much of the time with the British fleets, and from them had learned the worth of stern discipline and constant training—our navy borrowed of the British its regulations.

After two years in office, Secretary Stoddert was succeeded by congress that a board of three or five navy officers be constituted, but, as Mahan put it, "The recommendation fell fruitless. There followed eight years of a president (Jefferson) who held navies in abhorrence, as at the best barely tolerable evils." Jefferson's theory was that we needed only coast defense vessels, and he thought gunboats answered the purpose. At the outbreak of the war of 1812 we had 257 of these useless boats—they soon proved their worthlessness even for coast defense, since a single ship-of-the-line could have disposed of the lot.

But we had in the Constitution, the United States and the Admiral Schley.

Indies, the British had seven times the armament of the whole American navy; by 1814, when Napoleon was finally beaten, England could bring against us 13 other superior vessels, but not one ship-of-the-line. Against us, in the American waters from Halifax to the West

President three fine 44-gun frigates, superior to any frigate in the British navy. Besides these, we had 13 other serviceable vessels, but not one ship-of-the-line. Against us, in the American waters from Halifax to the West

(The next installment of this tabloid history of the American navy will be told in this paper tomorrow.)

COURT HEALS CHARGES AGAINST POLICE CHIEF

LOS ANGELES, April 21.—Charges against Chief of Police Sebastian were made in superior court by Miss Edith Ferlie, a 17-year-old orphan. She said she had been harassed and billed by Sebastian in a lodging house and to police station. On cross-examination, she could remember only one date—Christmas eve. Sebastian's friends say he was innocent.
