CHINA, DEVELOPED BY JAPAN, BETTER THAN CHINA UNDEVELOPED

—SAYS HERBERT QUICK

BY HERBERT QUICK. American citizens and especially American editors will, of course, do a great deal of thinking and much talking and writing on the topic of the Japanese-Chinese question.

It will be wise if they consider carefully what they as American citizens would like to have done if Japan insists upon getting a pretty firm hold on China and Chinese affairs.

Japan is the progressive nation of Asia. By a most intelligent system of agriculture, manufacturing and farming, she is supporting on a territory with less good land than is possessed by the state of Indiana, a population two-thirds as large as that of the whole United States.

Her national problems are very difficult. They are made more difficult by the attitude of this country, Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa toward Japanese immigration. We cannot let the Japanese immigrate in mass to any of these countries.

But the white races must not think that they can coop the Japanese up in their own island empire and still deny them the right to expand on the continent of Asia. Asia is the natural field for Japanese expansion in population and commerce.

China is closer to Japanese interest than is Mexico to us; and far closer than is any other country which we cover by the Monroe doctrine. If Japan seeks to establish a sort of Monroe doctrine of her own over China what are we going to do about it?

We have the right under the Hay-Takahira treaty to an open door in Chinese trade—that is we have a right to trade there on an equality with Japan or any other nation. Japan will not deny this, but she will probably press constantly forward to a control over Chinese affairs which will really take from us the privilege of the open door.

What are we going to do about it if she does?

We have three ways open to us.

1.—We may pursue a warlike policy and say to Japan that she must accede to what we think are our treaty rights in spirit as well as in letter, or take the consequences.

2.—We may adopt the extreme pacifist policy and give Japan a perfectly free hand in China without protest.

3.—We may proceed by diplomatic methods, using arguments, seeking the diplomatic aid of other nations with interests similar to our own, with the idea of saving by peaceful and friendly means all the commercial privileges we can.

There can be no doubt that the latter is the wisest plan. Japan does not desire a bad name as to her treatment of treaty obligations. She wants to remain on friendly terms with us. At the same time, she must feel, and we ought to bear this in mind, that she must be sure of her place in the sun in Asia since the cards are stacked against her, by the white races in both the Americas, in Africa, and in Australia.

Is it well for the world to have Japan imprisoned on those islands? It seems to me to be a world danger.

It seems to me that we ought to protect our commerce in China in a spirit of sympathy with Japan's needs. If we do that we shall be better off in the end than if we clench our fists. As a matter of fact, if Japan shall take on herself the task of developing China's enormous internal resources, we shall benefit, no matter what commercial policy she adopts. A developed China under Japanese influence cannot fail to be a better customer for us than is an undeveloped China with the open door—at least a door no more open than it now is.

BOYS NAVIGATE PUYALLUP FROM ELECTRON WEST

Two Kapowsin boys, Miles Murphy and Clifford Johnson, have set a new record. So far as known, they are the only persons to navigate successfully the Puyallup river above Puyallup.

Their trip, from Electron to Puyallup, is 30 miles. It took them seven hours, and they had these experiences: Bow of boat shattered on a rock, planks torn from bottom, seven times capsized, and each time forced to swim for their lives in the racing water. They were jammed up against rocks and flung up on sand-bars numberless times.

Previous attempts to navigate the river by canoe or boat have failed. The river is full of rocks and timbers, and the water runs 10 miles an hour in many places.

Peruvians Too Busy Digging for Gold to Grow Profitable Crops

View of the principal street in Callao, Peru, which is near Lima, and is the chief seaport of the country. Sketch shows actual size of average kernel of corn grown on Peruvian soil.

BY ROGER W. BABSON. LIMA, Peru, May 3.—From what I have seen of the country, I am convinced that Peru's future lies in irrigation. Without doubt there are great undeveloped mines of gold, silver, copper, coal and the like; but mining does not really develop a nation along worth while lines.

What astonishes me is to see men search the mountains of Peru for metals, while great rivers of fresh water are running through rich uncultivated prairies to the sea. If these rivers were dammed and the water raised to flow over the land, Peru would become a veritable Garden of Eden.

When at the market recently, at Arequepa, I purchased two cents worth of corn and will bring it home with me. The kernels measured one inch by half an inch; and are a clear cream color. Owing to the continual temperate weather throughout the year, a crop can be planted each month of the year, and consequently can be harvested each month of the year.

The great crops of Peru, however, are cotton, sugar, cocoa and rubber, the latter growing wild in the heavily wooded section of eastern Peru. Of these crops, the most famous is the Peruvian cotton, which grows on trees instead of on bushes as does our cotton. This Peruvian cotton is dark colored, with coarse long fibers resembling wool. When mixed with wool it makes "all wool worsteds." These are sold by manufacturers in England as very high grade woolen goods, so that the Peruvians say that their cotton is better than Australian wool!

While riding across the arid desert, I met two or three caravans bringing alpaca wool from the mountains into the market. "Why is the wool of the alpaca sheep so much stronger than that of the ordinary sheep?" I asked a merchant in Molendo. "Ah," said he in reply, "the alpaca live in the highlands and are obliged to fight for every bit of green which they eat, so that their life is one of continual struggle. The ordinary sheep are led by a shepherd from one green pasture to another. The result is that the alpaca wool is strong and long; while ordinary wool is inferior and short."

TIMES WILL GIVE MATINEE FOR KIDDIES AT PANTAGES

The Times is going to give a children's matinee. Next Saturday afternoon we will give a special matinee at the Pantages theater for children. The big feature of the Pantages show this week is "The Garden of the Rajah," a glorious, colorful musical comedy. David Reese and Miss Estelle McNeal, the leading man and woman of the company, want to entertain the children, and through the efforts of The Times, they will have some special stunts in their Saturday show especially for the little ones.

A coupon for children's admission to the theater will be printed in The Times later in the week. It's a great treat, children. Watch for the coupon!

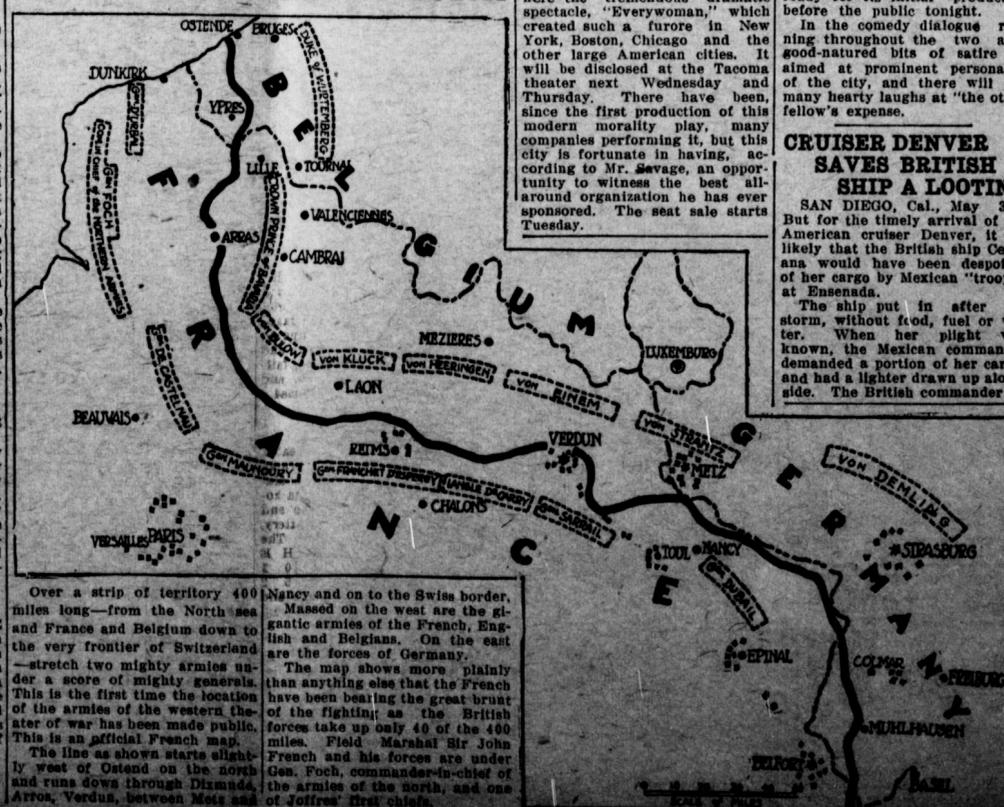

NEW GUN MAKES 42-CENTIMETER LOOK LIKE PISTOL

PARIS, May 3.—A cannon which will shoot 23.5 miles; This is believed to be the monster which has been bombarding Dunkirk, France, for the last two or three days.

The French believe they have her out of commission now, since no more of the huge shells have dropped in Dunkirk. Aeroplanes are kept constantly above the spot in Dixmude where the monster is supposed to be, and as the Germans do not wish to make known its location, the fire has been effectually silenced.

This gun makes the famous 42-centimeter howitzers look like a popgun.

HOW THE GERMANS AND ALLIES LINE UP TODAY

Over a strip of territory 400 miles long—from the North sea and France and Belgium down to the very frontier of Switzerland —stretch two mighty armies under a score of mighty generals. This is the first time the location of the armies of the western theater of war has been made public. This is an official French map. The line as shown starts slightly west of Ostend on the north and runs down through Dixmude, Arras, Verdun, between Metz and Nancy and on to the Swiss border. Massed on the west are the gigantic armies of the French, English and Belgians. On the east are the forces of Germany. The map shows more plainly than anything else that the French have been bearing the great brunt of the fighting; as the British forces take up only 40 of the 400 miles. Field Marshal Sir John French and his forces are under Gen. Foch, commander-in-chief of the armies of the north, and one of Joffre's first chiefs.

'Everywoman' Is Here Wednesday

Edna Porter as "Everywoman," in Henry W. Savage's production at the Tacoma theater Wednesday and Thursday.

Henry W. Savage is sending here the tremendous dramatic spectacle, "Everywoman," which created such a furor in New York, Boston, Chicago and the other large American cities. It will be disclosed at the Tacoma theater next Wednesday and Thursday. There have been, since the first production of this modern morality play, many companies performing it, but this city is fortunate in having, according to Mr. Savage, an opportunity to witness the best all-around organization he has ever sponsored. The seat sale starts Tuesday.
