

Wreck Scene In "Juggernaut" Worth Going Many Miles to See

Scene from the tremendous film success, "The Juggernaut," which opened a week's run at the Apollo Sunday.

"The Juggernaut," the greatest and most talked of film in America at the present time, attracted capacity audiences to the Apollo all day yesterday. The famous railroad wreck scene in this picture is the most stupendous and costly scene ever filmed. It shows a flying express train crashing through a rotten bridge, hurtling through the air with its precious cargo of human lives, into the icy waters of the lake below. This is one of the most awe-inspiring and thrilling scenes ever produced. It cost the Vitagraph Co. upwards of thirty thousand dollars to produce less than two hundred feet of this scene.

KAISER WILL SEE LEMBERG'S FALL

BERLIN, June 21.—Before the eyes of Kaiser Wilhelm, the Russians' last big stronghold in Galicia, Lemberg, is about to fall. Austrian troops today stormed the last line of the Slav defenses, 11 miles from the city itself, and well within the line of lakes which has served as a natural defense to the city, and the Slav forces are preparing to evacuate the city. Long trainloads of the Russian wounded are being hurried toward the Russian border, and aviators also report that they have seen trains bearing big guns and large quantities of ammunition on their way to Slav territory.

MOTHER HAD PLENTY OF MONEY, SAY SONS

Commissioner Mills' fit of indignation, aroused last week when Mrs. Goss, an aged woman of Fern Hill, told the council that she could not pay her city water assessments because her children had forsaken her, changed to an entirely different sentiment today when he received letters from Prof. V. D. Goss, principal of Bremer-ton schools, and W. B. Goss of Sumner, sons of the woman. The school principal wrote that his mother was eccentric and feeble, because of her age, but that she was by no means destitute. He said that Mrs. Goss had her home and two lots, besides a house on Yakima avenue from which she received $15 a month, and that she had recently received a bequest of $5,000, and was receiving monthly payments of several hundred dollars on South Tacoma property that she recently sold. Both sons reprimanded Mills severely for having allowed the

EILERS TO QUIT BUSINESS HERE AT END OF JUNE

Eilers Music House announced today that it had decided to retire, for the present, at least, from the retail piano business in Tacoma. Eilers had a similar plan a year ago, but was prevented from carrying it out, its officers say, by the terms of its lease. It will close out its business as to retire on the expiration of the present lease on the last day of this month.

Argentina to Rival U. S. As Exporter, Says Babson

Like the old days in the wild west. Cattle on free range in Argentina.

BY ROGER W. BABSON. Written in Solis, Argentina.

It is not the city which makes the city. The future of Chicago does not depend upon Chicago, but rather upon the country surrounding Chicago. It is the same with Buenos Aires. Hence, I went out to see the agricultural and stock raising country.

The first stop was Belgrava, a very attractive suburb about five miles from Buenos Aires. Soon after leaving Belgrava small farms for truck gardening were seen by the score. About every 20 minutes the train stops at a little town of a couple of hundred people. There is one main street with the general store at the corner. There are two barber shops, a saddler's shop and a blacksmith shop. There is the usual agricultural implement agency. Yes, these towns are very much like those in which many of you readers—in the states—were brought up.

I alighted from the train at one of these little stations, named Solis. With the exception of two or three persons dressed like myself, the men were dressed like cowboys in the states. Arriving at the estancia (ranch) I found a different type of men—called "gauchos." These are the real native Argentinians who have not mixed with any other race. These men wear low canvas shoes with rope soles; they wear no stockings and their cotton trousers are buttoned about the calf of the leg. A rough coat and the regulation black hat make up the rest of their attire.

The habit of the country regarding meals is odd. The first meal consists of rolls with tea or coffee taken at any time and any place. No one bothers much about it, especially the cook! The great meal is at 12 o'clock and it is called breakfast. It starts with a heavy soup; next comes fish or eggs, a sort of an Irish stew; then comes chicken, cooked in some form with a vegetable, then follows a roast of lamb with another vegetable or salad; and finally crackers, cheese and coffee. Directly following this heavy meal, all were invited to lie down for a siesta.

At five o'clock we were invited out on the side porch to have tea. At 5:30 horses were brought up fully saddled and we left for a ride to see the stock. I have never seen better cattle in my life. The grass is so rich and the seasons so open that the cattle can be bred, raised and fattened all in the same alfalfa field.

Each of these estancias average about 6,000 acres. Even the homestead in Argentine carries 1544 acres compared with our homestead of 160 acres. The land in Argentine is sold in squares, rectangles and leagues. A square is 4.17 acres; a hectare 10,000 square meters or 2.47 acres; while a league is 2500 hectares or 6177 acres.

Land in the west and some in the north is apt to be dry and should have irrigation; land in the south is often too wet and sometimes flooded; but the rainfall in the great province of Buenos Aires is usually just right and hence lands here sell at the highest prices, namely from $50 to $75. The ranch from which I am writing raises about 19 bushels of wheat and 60 bushels of corn per acre.

If one will go 200 or 300 miles farther good lands can be obtained near the railroad at from $25 to $50 per acre; or away from the railroad at from $10 to $20 per acre. I suppose that virgin land can be purchased for very much less; but I have referred above to only GOOD LAND, suitable for immediate planting. Argentine is destined to become the great competitor of the United States in exports of grain and cattle and their products.

The Argentine farmer is near to the sea and has the advantage of an open winter, cheaper labor and less competition. Remember that Buenos Aires is only 2100 miles farther from England than is New York.

After arriving home from on the horses about seven o'clock, I enjoyed the best meal of my life. Directly after the midday meal, Thomas Barber, the owner of the ranch, and a gaucho caught a fat sheep by the hind legs and in 15 minutes had it skinned and dressed. It was then attached to an iron rod, about four feet long, an end of which was stuck into the ground at an angle of 45 degrees. Under this an open fire was built.

At 7 o'clock it was ready to eat and in the moonlight, we ate with our fingers the chops cut from the sizzling roast. In the woods beyond the gauchos were singing accompanied by a guitar; under the peach trees the frogs were giving their evening calls; while for miles around could faintly be seen great herds of cattle and sheep grazing. Ah! It's a great country for the man with capital who wants to farm.

Were I a poor immigrant farmer I would go to the United States; but had I capital I certainly would buy a league of land in Argentine and there be a prince.
