HORNE REPORT SOUNDS GOOD

Following complaints that the Proctor street bridge, between North 31st and 32nd streets, the highest street car bridge in Tacoma, was becoming weak and shaky, bridge inspectors of the public works department made a rigid investigation yesterday afternoon.

"The bridge vibrates slightly, as all bridges do," said Chief Clerk Metzger of the public works department today. "But the inspectors reported that the structure is just as firm and strong as it was last time it was paved. It was partially rebuilt at that time. There is positively no danger of a collapse."

BRIDGE IS O. K. SAYS THE CITY

WAR'S WASTE UTILIZED!
NICK BUILDS HUGE BRIDGE FROM OLD SCRAPS!

No. 2—Swinging it below my flying Maggrip, I hovered over the silent valley of death! Shells and pieces of metal lay on all sides. The magnet drew them together thus!
