Pigeon-Toing Beneficial, Say College Professors

Georgine Elgme

Here's a picture of two extremes—Miss Georgine Elgme's face and feet. She's an exponent of the pigeon-toed walk.

BERKELEY, Cal., Nov. 1. — which causes that "tired feeling." Miss Georgine Elgme, a Los Angeles girl, besides illustrating the pose for the pigeon-toed health hint, is an advocate of the plan.

It is the best way to relieve fatigue, according to Prof. Maude Cleveland and Mrs. Elliott of the department of physical education at the University of California.

They claim that to walk pigeon-toed is a support to the arch of the foot, and therefore is not a strain on the muscles of the body, after a long walk.

To-Day's Bellringer

Cy de Vry, veteran keeper of the animals in Lincoln park zoo, Chicago, once had a hyena which was his special pet. One balmy afternoon when he had caked the beast, a young chappie edged up to the keeper as they stood near the hyena cage.

"Those bars are too far apart," he said, "that hyena might squeeze through if he took the notion."

"Yes—that's what he's laughing at," replied de Vry.

THE ENIGMA.

"Do you think marriages are made in heaven?" "No. But heaven only knows why some of them are pulled off!"

"And when you threatened to scream for help, did he stop kissing you?" "Yes—once or twice."

QUESTIONS THEY WRITE TO CYNTHIA GREY--HER ANSWERS

Her Mail Runs the Gamut of Human Emotions; Love, Pathos, Happiness, Tragedy and Tears.

The volume of my correspondence has grown so rapidly in the last few months that a further systematizing of my work is necessary.

For that reason I shall receive office callers hereafter only on Wednesdays, between 11 a. m. and 4 p. m. These hours I will keep open for visitors to the office, with the hope that many of my friends will come to me in person with their questions, but on other days I shall have to limit my services to replying by mail.

CYNTHIA GREY.

Q.—I am a young girl attending high school in this city. I am deeply in love with a young man 17 years of age who attends the same school. He says I am the only girl he ever loved. Last night he begged me to run away with him, but I told him I could not give him my answer now, but promised to in a few days. He is a very nice boy.

I am 16 years of age and have thought I was in love many times before. I really love him more than any of the other young men I have ever known. Now, Miss Grey, I am going to wait until I receive your answer before giving him my decision. Please answer as soon as possible and oblige.

UNDECIDED.

A.—Neither of you could marry legally without perjuring yourselves, for the law plainly states that a girl must be 18 and a man 21 before they can marry. Do you want to begin the most important part of your life with a lie? Aside from that, you must take into consideration your means of support and that of children which are apt to come from marriage. It is not reasonable to suppose that a 17-year-old school boy is financially fixed to take upon himself such responsibility, even though he were sufficiently mentally and physically developed, which we know he is not. And you are no more fit or prepared to become the mother of children.

You say you have thought you were in love many times, and you are apt to think yourself in love many times more before the right man comes along. You should at least finish your high school course and give yourself a year after that to speculate.

I am glad you wrote and confided your little affair to me, and I hope to hear from you again soon saying that you have decided to follow my advice.

Q.—I am only a young girl, but I have wrinkles under my eyes. I use witch hazel on my face three times a day to get rid of them, but it has not helped them in the least. Can you suggest anything else?

ELSIE.

A.—These wrinkles may be caused by eye-strain. You should have your eyes examined by a first-class oculist. Witch hazel is an astringent and will not help your wrinkles. Try massaging the skin about the eyes with a good cold cream.

Q.—My little girl is eight years old and is very nervous. She is a very poor sleeper. Sometimes she does not get more than eight hours sleep at night. Do you think this is enough?

A MOTHER.

A.—No, a child of that age should be sleeping twelve hours every night. An adult can get along with eight hours, but a growing child must have more.
