ANSWERS....

By Cynthia Grey

Q.—I was dining downtown a month ago, when a man whom my husband dislikes stopped at my table. He is a married man, handsome and popular. As he paused to speak to me—I don't know why I did it—but I asked him to sit down.

We had a harmless, silly, society chat, and he insisted on paying for my luncheon. He had no right to offer, neither had I to permit it, but I let him pay my check.

And I did not tell about the affair when I got home! But a mutual friend saw us, and told his wife, and the story got to my husband. He thought the luncheon had been planned, and he put it straight to me.

And I lied! "I said I wasn't there at all! My husband made no comment. I am a truthful woman by nature. He appeared to take my word for it, but I know he doesn't believe me. And I can never confess the real truth to him as long as I live for he is an unforgiving man.

The whole thing was a horrible mischance, past all helping now, but not past suffering for.

I never answer "no" to the simplest question from my dear husband but I think of this buried chapter in my life, and wonder if he believes me. MRS. S. B.

Evidently, this was a defensive lie, the same as a little boy tells to avoid a whipping. Mrs. S. B. reverted to an unformed or primitive type when she told it. Most big mistakes by good people can be accounted for in much the same way.

Perhaps you have a "hidden chapter" in your life, a tale of absorbing human interest in your own experience.

Let The Times print your confession. To tell it may take your trouble off your mind. Your name will not be used.

Q.—My eyesight is very bad, but I do not care to wear glasses. What can I do? I have adenoids. Do they affect the sight? RAY.

A.—Have your adenoids removed. Consult an oculist, and if he tells you to wear glasses, do so. Do not let pride stand in the way of better health.

Q.—Are pearls found in oysters of any value? Is there any sale for them? C. T.

A.—Yes, pearls of value are found in oysters. Their value depends upon their size and clearness. Any jeweler can advise about their sale.

CONFESSIONS OF A WIFE

(Copyright, 1915, by Newspaper Enterprise Association.)
"Say, Margie," said Dick this morning, rather shyly, "don't you think it would be rather nice to spend some of that money you have left from Aunt Mary's legacy for an automobile?"

I looked up in surprise. The idea had not occurred to me, but now, at Dick's suggestion, it grew to pleasant proportions.

"I know, dear, that Aunt Mary would like us to have as much pleasure as possible out of her bequest and or taxi bills would go a long way toward keeping a car. What do you think of it?"

"I think it would be splendid," I exclaimed. "Let's go right down and buy one."

"Not so fast, you dear impulsive lady. We must decide on what make of a car we want."

"Well, my dear, I have always thought that if we only could have one, I would like an electric."

Dick's face fell. "But we could not get out in the country," he expostulated.

"That is true. But one does not go touring so very often. At least you and I would not and the electric is so comfortable. We cannot afford a chauffeur and I could drive an electric so much easier than I could a gas car. Besides, I hate to get all blown to pieces and I abhor the dust and dirt that you get in riding in a gas car."

"I never had much use for those fireless cooker machines myself," said Dick, rebelliously, "but I am again reminded that it is for you to say; it is your money, my dear."

"Oh, but Dick, I don't want to be mean about the matter. Let's go down and see both gas and the electric cars and then choose."

"All right; come down to luncheon today and then we will take in automobile row."

Little book, there is one thing that Dick knows I love to do, and that is to go to the club or restaurant for luncheon.

A woman who keeps house never figures that her luncheons at home cost anything, and most women having to save the pennies always eat at home and "save" the money for something else.

And I believe most women are like I am—I mean women who do not know the joys of wealth—they cannot help but look at the price mark beside the dishes on the bill when they dine at a restaurant. I suppose it is our love of a bargain. I remember some friend of Dick's recounting with great glee the way he managed when he and his wife boarded at an hotel, to keep his wife from eating mince pie, which always gave her indigestion and which she could never resist.

"The portion had always been 10 cents, but I just had the waiter mark it on our menu twenty-five," he said, with a laugh. "Do you know that extra 15 cents did what all my warning of headache could not do?"

Dick called this woman stingy, but I told him that probably she was only a careful buyer.

This seemed to tickle Dick more than the original story, although I had not meant to be funny, for I do certainly believe that most women are very different from men when they purchase food. A man will buy what he wants regardless of price if he has the money in his pocket and a woman—if she has to pay for it herself—will always hunt about until she finds something which will appease her hunger at a low price.

When I go with Dick to the restaurant I let him order and I will say this for him—that while, when we were first married, he always ordered a beefsteak, he now consults my appetite as well as his own.

Little book, I have decided on one thing. Although I would like for myself an electric car, I am not going to say a word. I am going to let Dick make the choice. (Continued tomorrow.)

IS THE BEST GOOD ENOUGH?

Report of CLAY L. JENNISON, Naval Architect, on test made in Experimental Model Basin at Washington, D. C., March 20, 1915, on the Hyde Automatic Ship Brake, shows that in 15 seconds at the most, the momentum of a 350-foot 4,200-ton vessel, traveling 17 knots per hour, should be taken care of by the propellers, aided by the Ship Brake, in a distance of 335 feet; while a 4,800-ton vessel traveling 16 knots per hour would require 68 seconds and would travel 1,065 feet, without the Ship Brake.

Letter dated Sept. 11, 1915, from one of the LEADING MARINE INSURANCE AUTHORITIES of the world, referring to similar tests of the Hyde Bilge Keel Brake, states: "These tests have since come to hand and are very convincing, and it is the opinion of the writer that it is only a question of how thoroughly you can have the same adopted."

From paper on Ship Brakes by CAPT. WILLIAM S. SMITH, U. S. N. Member of Society of Naval Architects and Marine Engineers: "The final conclusion reached—that the simplest form of brake designed to be set in the side of a vessel, to be released instantly by the officer on the bridge throwing a lever, and opened by the pressure of the water without further thought; to be supplied with only enough power and mechanism to haul in the brake when the vessel was stopped or going astern, and lock it fast for future use—was the only practical solution of the question."
