18 SHIPS LOST BY GERMANY

LONDON, June 5.—The hope of English families that more sailors engaged in the great naval battle of Skagerak would be rescued was finally crushed today.

Vessels reaching Copenhagen brought vivid tales of the awfulness of the conflict. However, pride in the British navy is growing hourly with the continued insistence of the admiralty that Germany lost heavily.

Copenhagen reports that the bodies of British and German sailors are being washed ashore on the coast of Jutland. Scandinavian steamers have rescued survivors of the German battleship Weisbaden.

Large German cruisers which have been patrolling the Russian coast have been withdrawn, Copenhagen reports.

English Claim Victory. The admiralty today takes the ground that last week's naval battle really was a British victory, contrary to earlier reports.

The destruction of 18 German vessels is now claimed. This would make the Kaiser's losses greater, absolutely as well as relatively, than England's.

Among the German vessels now said to be destroyed is the Seydlitz, a dreadnaught cruiser of 25,000 tons.

STRIKERS, REBUKED, AWAIT CONFERENCE

Changes Bad Faith. In a telegram sent to Secretary Madsen of the Longshoremen's association Saturday, the secretary of labor scored the strikers for what he termed a violation of their contract with the employers entered into Dec. 23, 1915, in which it was agreed that 60 days' notice must be given of any proposed change.

The strikers reply to Wilson by saying that they are not proposing to change the contract but to eliminate it entirely, to which Wilson's answer was:

"The statement that you are not proposing to change the agreement, but to cancel it, deceives no one. You cannot cancel such an agreement without changing it to something else."

In urging that the strikers return to work under the terms of the contract, pending the 60 days' notice, Wilson has asked that the department of labor be given a chance to bring about a settlement.

BIG MEN OF ALASKA

His part in a tremendous adventure, by which 200 starving whalers were saved in the high Arctic, serves best to illustrate the caliber of William T. Lopp, head of the United States bureau of education for Alaska.

Until recently, though it occurred years ago, this amazing exploit has remained practically untold.

Accompanied by Lieut. Jarvis of the U. S. Revenue Cutter Bear and a few Eskimo drivers, Lopp took a herd of 437 reindeer from Cape Prince of Wales to Point Barrow, a distance of 700 miles, in midwinter over a trackless desolation.

Almost superhuman, the feat still stands as one of the great heroics of the north.

With the thermometer 60 below zero, battling wolves who ravaged at the flanks of the herd, breaking trail through snows and storms, over mountains and icefields never before traversed by white man, Lopp guided his precious animals to the relief of the marooned men.

It took 45 days to beat up to the Arctic. Then when reindeer had been slaughtered to feed the scurvy-threatened sailors and the remainder of the herd had been left in charge of Lieut. Jarvis, Lopp and his faithful Eskimos fought their way back again over the barrens.

Today Lopp is still directing the civilizing forces by which the once barbarous, nomadic Eskimo, Aleuts and Indians of Northwestern Alaska have been converted into an energetic, thrifty and trustworthy folk.

For 26 years he's been on the job, living close to "his" people as teacher-missionary-pioneer.

His unselfish devotion to their welfare has won him the complete confidence of a once murderous, suspicious natives.

FRENCH RECOUP LOSSES

PARIS, June 5.—The Germans launched several hot infantry attacks on Vaux last night, employing liquid fire. The attacks were repulsed, the communique asserts.

Elsewhere the fighting was heavy. The Germans were unable to gain a yard.

Sunday the Germans gained a foothold at Vaux, but were quickly expelled. Despite the recent German successes, the French are sublimely confident.

They expect the allied actions at other points on the western front will help solve the Verdun problem. They believe the Germans are without sufficient reserves to start action along the entire western front simultaneously.

Will Read Riot Act to Whiskers

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 5.—President Wilson today began drafting the reply to Carranza's demands for withdrawal of American troops from Mexico.

He intends to hand the reply to Carranza before the end of the week and so forestall the expected adverse criticism of his Mexican policy at the Chicago convention.

Lansing and Wilson may present a rough draft of the reply to the cabinet tomorrow. It seemed certain today that the demand for withdrawal will be refused.

The answer will be couched in terms that will leave Carranza ample opportunity to keep himself right before the Mexican public. It will state that completely peaceful conditions must prevail, with the certainty that wholesale banditry, lawlessness and raids cannot recur.
