It explains and depicts to her in the most forceful manner the information which it is your duty as a mother to impart to her. Many mothers overlook this Christian duty to their loved ones and send them into the world totally ignorant of the mystery of the sexes. This picture in a delicate manner, but at the same time in a forcible way, brings home to every thinking person the seriousness of what is the DUTY of every true American woman.

CITY MANAGER IDEA ADOPTED BY 40 CITIES

(Editor's Note: The following article is the first of a series on the city manager plan of municipal government that will appear in The Times. The articles were prepared under the direction of the National Short Ballot Organization, and the facts cited are vouched for as accurate. The second article will tell how Henry M. Waite is running the affairs of Dayton, O., like a private business.)

During the last four years, forty American cities and towns have changed their municipal charters and adopted the commission-manager form of government.

This form unifies all the powers of the city in a small elective council or board of directors, usually of five members elected at large, and this board hires a city manager, a trained man, usually from out of town, to be the executive agent and chief administrator, working under their continuous oversight and direction and subject to discharge at any time he fails to reflect credit upon them.

The plan has aroused wide attention and the results are already so striking that city managers are being seriously talked of in such cities as Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Boston and Chicago.

The profession of city management is well under way. The managers have already had their second annual convention.

Five of them who did well as managers of small cities have been called to larger cities and increased salaries.

Two universities have arranged courses for training such executives.

All but three or four of the cities have chosen their managers from out of town, usually getting engineers with municipal experience.

Whence came this bold idea? In the fall of 1910, Lockport, N. Y., was looking for a chance to get aboard the commission government movement, which was then sweeping over the country, but the New York laws at that time did not permit it.

The board of trade accordingly had to prepare special legislation and proceeded to improve on the regular commission plan by combining its single elective board feature with an appointive manager scheme which had been successfully tried out in Staunton, Va.

The combination produced an exact copy of the plan of organization which prevails in every private business corporation with its board of directors and general manager.

Lockport never succeeded in getting its bill passed at Albany, but the "Lockport plan" was talked about all over the country.

In the summer of 1912, Sumter, S. C., a city of 8,000 inhabitants, adopted a new charter embodying the Lockport idea and began operating under the new system early in the following year. This was the first city therefore to have the commission-manager system.

Dayton, O., had been through a long siege of wasteful, inefficient administration headed by spoils politicians. When the charter commission had thoroughly investigated all the prevailing and proposed types of city government, they concluded that Sumter had the best on the market. Then the big flood came in 1913 and the incapacity of the old government was emphasized anew.

When things became normal again, the people adopted the new charter by a big majority.

Springfield, O., took similar action a few weeks later.

Then the movement jumped to Texas and the plan was adopted by seven cities there in the course of the next two years.

Three cities in California, five in Michigan, three in New York, one each in Florida, Colorado, Virginia and Iowa have followed suit, the principal ones being Niagara Falls, St. Augustine, Cadillac, Manistee, Jackson, Newburgh (N. Y.), Phoenix, (Ariz.) and Wheeling.

Describes Jailbreak

OLYMPIA, Aug. 1.—John F. Gillies, state looter, agreed to pay Henry Roberts $200 to help him escape from the Thurston county jail, then left him in the lurch before the money was paid, according to the story told by Roberts to Sheriff McCorkie.

The sheriff reached Olympia with Roberts last night. Roberts said he was glad Gillies had been captured at Key West because the looter had double crossed him.

Telling the story of their escape, he said they sawed their way through the jail doors with "a number of files he found in one of the cells." They worked for three weeks before they were ready to make a break for liberty.
