INSTRUCTOR CAUSED GIRL SWIMMER TO GET ANGRY; SO SHE BECAME CHAMPION

BY OLGA FLORENCE DORFNER American Champion Girl Swimmer.

(Copyright, 1916, Newspaper Enterprise Association.)

At the time I began my first attempts at swimming, nearly five years ago, I was afraid of all sorts of foolish things. I was frightened at the thought of getting off my feet, of turning myself loose in the water. I was sure I could never trust myself to risk an effort at diving. It seemed certain that some dire fate would befall me if I ventured out over the six-foot mark in the plunge.

"Miss Dorfner," he said, "you've got to get this notion of 'I can't' out of your head. You'll never learn to swim and you'll do few other things you hope to accomplish if you persist in being afraid to move. There's absolutely nothing to be frightened about. You're not going to drown and you've simply got to convince yourself of that fact."

Then he actually made me get out into deep water. I really was frightened, but his scolding made me angry, so I just decided I would show him I could do something, even if I died trying. Of course, I did not drown. He was there to prevent that very thing. After I learned that I could propel myself through deep water, even though I was a novice at the water sport, I gained more confidence. A very delicious thrill of victory went over me. I had accomplished something I had never done before and the effort in doing it was not one small part as terrible as I had imagined it would be.

"Ramona," Read By 20,000,000 Persons, Is Gigantic Picture

WHERE TACOMA IS AMUSING ITSELF

Theaters TACOMA Coming — "The Birth of a Nation." PANTAGES "Brides of the Desert," and big vaudeville bill. HIPPODROME Five Spanish Troubadors, and Photoville program.

Film Houses

REGENCY "The Captive God," with William S. Hart; Triangle. APOLLO "The Quitter," with Lionel Barrymore. COLONIAL "The Dream Girl," with Theodore Roberts and Mae Murray. MELBOURNE "Damaged Goods," with Richard Bennett.

DELIGHTFUL ROMANCE

Mae Murray has one of the prettiest romantic dramas of her career in "The Dream Girl," which is appearing at the Colonial. How the girl of the slums meets her "Sir Gallahad," who happens to be the grandson of a very wealthy man, and how they both fall in love, forms a delightful story. Theodore Roberts has the male lead. "Under Two Flags," with Theda Bara as "Cigarette," comes to the Colonial Thursday.

IT'S A KEYSTONE

Bathing girl comedies appeal to all classes of film followers, and "The Surf Girls," at the Regent, is first in its class. Pretty Keystoneers in swimming attire, clever comedians, ludicrous situations and action that breaks all speed records, keep the crowds in a hilarious mood. The dramatic feature of the bill is "The Captive God," a play from the Aztec world, with William S. Hart in the lead.

IRENE IS CLEVER

Irene Fenwick, popular and gifted stage and screen star, makes her debut on the Metro program in "The Child of Destiny," coming to the Apollo Wednesday. She appears first in a woman's outfit, and then completes her role in the prettiest frocks imaginable. Miss Fenwick has just completed a successful Broadway stage engagement in "The Co-Respondent." Lionel Barrymore's "The Quitter" completes its engagement at the Apollo tonight.

NEW CHAPLIN FILM

Chaplin's latest comedy released by Mutual, "One A. M.," will appear at the Hippodrome with the new Photoville bill Wednesday. The picture is said to be the best yet produced by the Chaplin-Mutual company. Chaplin appears in his old familiar make-up, and the action starts when he arrives home at 1 a. m., slightly worse for wear. The entire film is a gale of laughter, and has made a big hit in other cities where it has had its first presentation.

LAST TIME TODAY

"Damaged Goods," the big hygiene drama, produced with Richard Bennett in the leading role, appears for the last time at the Melbourne today. On the new bill for Wednesday will be "The Man From Nowhere," a five-part Red Bird feature with King Baggot in the leading role.

Monroe Salisbury as Alessandro Assis and Adda Gleason as Ramona in the photodrama "Ramona."

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Aug. 15.—After fifty-one failures to translate "Ramona," Helen Hunt Jackson's wonderful romance of California, into acceptable dramatic form for photoplay production, a success as remarkable as the failures has at last been achieved. "Ramona" is the longest picture drama ever shown consisting of 13 luminous reels and requiring three hours to show—a more stupendous spectacle than "The Clansman." Stage settings of gigantic proportions precede the showing of each part of the film. They depict the salient locations, such as the Santa Barbara mission and Ramona's home. "Ramona" is accompanied by the longest and most varied musical score ever associated with a motion picture. The best thing about this production, which is being simulta-

D. W. Griffiths Accomplished Great Achievement When He Produced "Birth of a Nation"

Marian Cooper, who has the role of Margaret Cameron in the great film, "The Birth of a Nation," which opens a two-weeks' engagement at the Tacoma Sunday. D. W. Griffith, hailed everywhere as the world's greatest director of motion picture productions, hit the high water mark when he conceived "The Birth of a Nation," the much talked-of picture which comes to the Tacoma theater Sunday for a two weeks' engagement. Covering the whole rupture between the North and South, and touching upon all angles of the great Civil war and the developments which followed it, the play has a theme that few directors would dare to handle. Yet Griffiths produced the entire story in a three-hour picture play. And in doing so, he created a film which is looked upon by all motion picture persons as the greatest triumph that stageland ever conceived.

WHO?

SHE IS ADDA GLEASON, who has the role of Margaret Cameron in the great film, "The Birth of a Nation," which opens a two-weeks' engagement at the Tacoma Sunday.
