"Eight Hours' Leisure"

Some very nice persons who pride themselves on NOT belonging to the working classes are saying bitter things about the federal eight-hour labor law.

They are repeating the ancient criticism that eight hours of work with eight hours of sleep leaves a man eight hours of leisure which means a tempting opportunity to indulge in intoxicants.

Elegant gentlemen who haven't the skill to run their own motor cars, but who must hire a chauffeur to do it for them, are thus freely expressing their opinion of what 400,000 of the nation's most reliable workers will do with their new bit of spare time.

All which merely shows how carelessly the carpers think. Evidently they haven't noticed that the temperance movement and the growth and power of the labor organizations, although absolutely unrelated, have been advancing steadily, side by side, ever since an eight-hour day first became the laboring man's stake.

Evidently they have not observed that both these steps in human progress are touching new high levels at exactly the same moment.

And it is not the movies, as some say, which are freeing man from an age-old slavery to drink.

IT'S BRAINS—brains of the same good brand which man also uses to liberate himself from industrial oppression.

The biggest threat in "eight hours of leisure" is that it gives a man a chance to use his brains, more and still more, to his own advantage.

No wonder the protected rich prophesy evil.

How much trouble he avoids who does not look to see what his neighbor says or does or thinks, but only to what he does himself, that it may be just and pure!—Marcus Aurelius.

Go For Them, Woodrow

President Ripley of the Santa Fe railway, boldly declares that his railway will not comply with the Adamson eight-hour law until ordered to do so by the United States supreme court.

Virtually this is a declaration that corporations will pass upon the constitutionality of congressional acts.

If Ripley carries out his threat, he should be arrested and the government should seize his law-breaking railway and operate it in accord with existing United States laws.

The Adamson act is law until it is set aside by the United States supreme court; and neither corporation nor individual should be permitted to violate it meanwhile.

Go for the Santa Fe, Woodrow Wilson!

Sounds Like a Man

We feel like handing it to Mr. Leslie Moon, young Coronado millionaire, for being a good sport and a good loser. Moon was caught by a Santa Ana motor cop speeding and awarded 10 days in jail by an obdurate judge. Of course, Moon might have used his wealth to defeat justice with the chances good for eventually winning out. Justice tires quickly in a bout with dollars.

But he didn't. He "served his little bit," like a man. Now he is out of jail. "It wasn't so bad after all," he says. "Besides, it was coming to me and I never will speed again, barring an emergency."

A new brand of millionaire philosophy and one which will probably gag the Coronado colony mightily. Yet 'tis a MAN'S philosophy. We are pleased to have met you, Mr. Moon.

Margie Envis Annie In New Motherhood

It was like Annie to arrange to send little Margaret Ann to me with the news of the birth of a brother.

Margaret Ann is a radiant beauty, and in her excited state this morning she was perfectly exquisite. "Come right here to Aunt Margie, Margaret, Ann," I said. "You haven't been to see me for ages."

"No," she answered, "but you see, Aunt Margie, I had to stay home and take care of dad while mother went to the hospital to pick out a baby. The angels must have brought a fine batch last time, for mother has been able to get a hummer of a little brother for me."

"Mercy, Margaret Ann, don't you know you must not talk slang even when ordinary words fall you in describing little brother?"

"That's what dad calls him when he doesn't say 'little cuss.'" Alice laughed as I groaned. "Worse and more of it!" Little Margaret Ann's face grew grave, and she said, "Aunt Margie, I've come here to ask you something."

"Go ahead, dear child."

"Do you think there is any mistake about little brother?"

"Why, honey, what in the world do you mean?"

"Well, you see, when I went over to Aunt Eliene's to school yesterday I told Budge and Toddy that I had a little baby brother and they asked me where we got it, and I said mother told me God sent it."

"Then that horrid Toddy said, 'I'll bet it isn't your!'"

"Then he explained:

"Don't you remember, yesterday, when we met Willie Standish in the park, and he told us his little brother was put in the cemetery? Didn't his mother say God took him?"

"Well, don't you see, Margaret Ann? That same night God sent you a little brother. Now, I'll bet you've got Willie's baby brother!"

"No, dear, your little brother is your very own," I said, and I did not allow my face to register laughter. "God never mixes babies."

Before the child left I gave her a note to Annie. I had written: "Again the great miracle of life has come to you, dear Annie. I am happy for you and I must confess I am a little envious, too. But I may yet feel the dear little head of a child on my breast."

"In your happiness, dear, will you not spare a hope that it will be so? I shall try to see you before you are out of the hospital, for Annie, I can walk a little already and you may be sure the first visit I make will be to you, the friend of my girlhood who had never failed me."

A Fine Thing to Do

It must be gratifying to the neutral world to learn that the officers and men of the German airship destroyed recently while raiding England, will be buried with full military honors. Each body will be placed in an oak coffin, draped with a German flag, and carried to the grave on a British gun carriage. British soldiers will compose the firing party and a British chaplain will conduct the services.

Since the beginning of the war there has prevailed a peculiar esprit in the aviation service of the European armies. Members of the air corps, upon both sides, have been valorous and magnanimous. Perhaps it is because they are, in some degree, removed from the scenes of brutal carnage common to the earth beneath them. Perhaps it is because the very nature of the service calls for material of a finer grain.

Whatever be the explanation, the air men have, alone, lived up to the best traditions and the highest standards of civilized warfare. The example set by England in the case of the ill-fated Zeppelin crew is a worthy one. A few cases like this will go far toward allaying the bitterness and hatred the war has engendered.

It does credit to England and good to her cause. May it be just the beginning of an era of magnanimity and humanity which will efface some of the blacker memories.

At the annual meeting of the Hudson's Bay company it was reported that American fur traders were invading the Canadian north and competing with the outposts of the ancient company, whose ranks of trappers are greatly depleted on account of enlistments in the Canadian expeditionary forces for service in Europe.

Just One Question

The 64th session of congress, just closed, will go down in history as one with a record of great accomplishments. Barring the corrupt practices bill, and immigration act, every bit of scheduled legislation was enacted. The powerful personality of the president, the driving force behind congress, has prevailed—to the eternal good of the people of the United States.

More constructive and truly progressive laws have been written into the statutes than by any congress within the memory of the average man.

The democratic party may, for once at least, "point with pride" to its four years' record. Woodrow Wilson is the physical embodiment of the democratic party; the man responsible to the largest degree, for that record. Whether it meets with the approval of the bulk of the American people; whether this country shall continue upon the broad path of progress which means prosperity, contentment and happiness for the many, or return to the narrow road of "conservatism" which leads to the enrichment of a chosen few, is the one question to be determined in November.

The overwhelming vote in the Georgia legislature against a bill aimed at lynching shows how dangerous it is for a politician to come between the people and their little pleasures.

Wall Street Jubilant

Did you notice how Wall st. took the news of the republican majority in Maine?

The money men were wildly elated, and the war brides at once began establishing new and dizzy records.

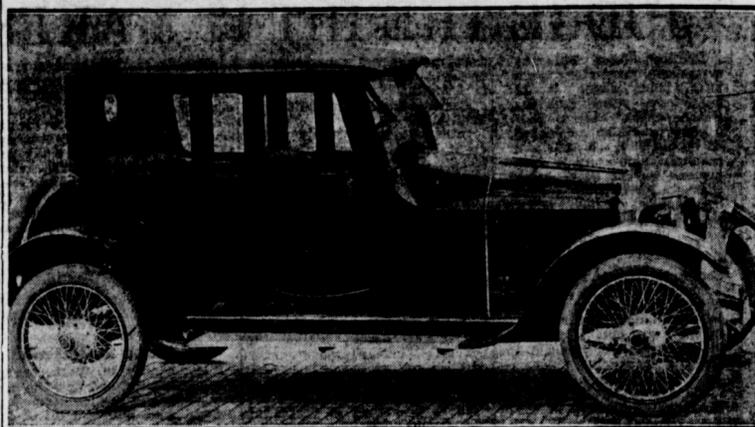

There was a regular stock debauch.

Why? Because, Wall st. thought, the Maine result was hopeful for Hughes.

No truer demonstration of how the republican nominee and Special Interest are related could have been desired. Wall st. loves its candidate.

New Scripps-Booth Car Is Attractive

One of the most attractive of the fall models of motor cars is the new eight-cylinder Scripps-Booth with its winter top. This top was designed as an integral part of the car, although it is easily detachable for summer driving. The top fits closely to the body with flush sides and will not rattle under the heaviest road strains. The interior is finished in gray whippoor, and a dome light adds to the attractiveness. Both the winter top and the regular top are furnished with the eight-cylinder model, although it is possible to purchase this model without the winter top. St. Helens Auto Sales Co. are distributors for the state.

Q—I am coming to you with a question which has been worrying me quite a lot of late.

Seven years ago I was divorced from my husband, who was a habitual drunkard, and in five months I was married to another man.

We went to Idaho to be married, thinking it would make it legal, and, in fact, we have always thought so. About a year ago my husband and I had trouble over another woman and he finally left me, so I have been supporting myself for about eight months. I was going to apply for a divorce, but seeing an answer in your paper of recent date where you said such marriages were not legal, I want to know about mine.

Who must I go to to find out about it; also what steps do I have to take to be entirely free from him? I have a child by the first man, but there were none from the second marriage, so for my child's sake I want everything to be as quiet as possible.

A.—If you did not leave this state to evade the divorce laws—in other words, if you established your residence in Idaho at the time of your marriage, it is valid. If you went to Idaho merely to have the ceremony performed and returned to this state to live immediately after, then you were married illegally. In any event you must go through the regular divorce proceedings or have the marriage annulled in order to be free. It would be best for you to consult a reliable attorney.

Q.—I am a widow with one son. I have worked like a slave to help him get a trade and get a start in the world. Now, just as he has finished his trade he has gotten in with a woman, and her daughter who are urging a speedy marriage. Because I advise him to wait until he gets a start they offer me every kind of an insult. Do you see any happiness for a boy who marries a girl with that kind of mother, particularly as she intends to live with them?

A WORRIED MOTHER. A.—A girl who causes a son to forget his mother is not apt to make a good wife. The debt a son owes his mother for her guidance and care and sacrifice for his welfare is in many cases too easily forgotten. Young people are looking forward to what the future has for them, eager to claim it for themselves. When your son gets older it is to be hoped he will remember what you have done. He will not forget you, even though he seems now to be disregarding your advice.

Q.—Please print a simple recipe to remove freckles from my face, as I have tried a number of things without success.

ANXIOUS GIRL. A.—Freckles are unequal deposits of pigment or coloring matter brought to the surface of the skin by the sun. Certain skins are super-sensitive to the sun, and their freckles can never be removed permanently. They may be reduced, or made to disappear temporarily, but they are sure to require successive treatments.

Lemon Juice is the simplest of remedies for freckles, either the pure juice rubbed from a slice, or equal parts of lemon juice and glycerin.

When freckles are persistent, use a lotion composed of 4 ounces lactic acid, 4 ounces glycerin and 4 ounce rosewater. Apply several times a day and cover with cold cream at night.

Q.—Not long ago I made the acquaintance of a gentleman. He always treats me very courteous and I enjoy being in his company.

Recently I received a letter from my guardian in which she forbade me to see him again. Yet she has only met him once and the only cause she gives for her attitude is that she hates and scorns his nationality.

Please tell me if I should be obedient and never see him again or shall I continue his friendship? AGNES.

A.—Obey your guardian until you become of age or until you form opinions and ideas of your own regarding the problem of whether it is best for men and women of different nationalities to mix socially.

APRON-DRESS FOR SCHOOL

BY BETTY BROWN. For a pert little person he will be toddling off to kindergarten soon. Mme. Becker of the Fashion League of America has designed a cunning little apron-dress. It's mostly apron. It is all in a piece and falls in straight lines from the shoulder. The Empire belt of black velvet ribbon with two bows in back is the only excuse for calling it a dress. It's made of pink and blue gingham. The sunbonnet is blue; the school bag white and blue wicker.
