He is a practitioner of exceptional ability and has the name of successfully turning out some of the most difficult jobs in dentistry. He has for years made a special study in the handling of children's teeth, and has written on this subject for a number of years. Joe Hudesek, a trusty in the county jail for the last month, incarcerated for shooting at a man and sent up for 6 months, took leave of absence last week Friday evening, and walked to Marcus on his way out of the country. Sheriff Woodard was not aware of any such arrangement until evening, and had little expected Hudesek to make an escape, as it was likely the prisoner would be let out in another month by court order. So Woodard got busy, and Deputy Dorman picked up the man across the river from Marcus Sunday night. He is now in the steel cage repining over his lot, instead of being allowed his former freedom to work on the county-house lawn for his keep. The capture cost the county about $15, but considering the fact that the county had already received a month's work from the prisoner by reason of his being made a trusty, the county is still some considerable gainer over the "work for your board" system in the sheriff's office. Hudesek was very much surprised to be captured, and had previously made brags that he could get away from most any jail. It is known that he did escape from another jail and was out 13 days. However, Deputy Dorman had him located, and in the darkness of the night on the river bank struck a match in the man's face, and a gun within his range of vision, and Hudesek consented to come back to the county seat to wait until after Yep-Kanum.
