The eater of too many green apples knows how Mexico feels with indigestible dictators raising rumpuses within its vitals.

The catastrophe last Saturday when an excursion steamer turned turtle and drowned over 1,000 people, puts terrible emphasis upon the responsibility of inspectors of public conveyances. So far as the facts are now known they seem to show that the owners of the ship and the inspectors also were at fault. The disaster does not surprise those who from residence in Chicago and familiarity with lake excursions have long been acquainted with the possibilities. The Eastland, the doomed boat, was the steamer crank of the lakes, and according to W. J. Wood, naval architect, was known by the owners in 1903 to be a dangerous ship. Maclay Hoyle, state's attorney at Chicago, declares that a "considerable portion of the blame rests upon the United States inspection bureau. If the inspectors had done their duty the accident could not have occurred." The ship was considered unsafe by the inspectors. Letters on file at Washington predicted the sad occurrence. The terrible teaching of the horrible catastrophe is that every inspector of common carriers or of other public utilities ought always to consider himself personally as well as officially responsible for the most faithful and efficient performance of his task. He should fully and solemnly realize that he holds precious human lives in his keeping. The slightest failure to do his work conscientiously and thoroughly may bring about a disaster comparable to this at Chicago.

Wenatchee keeps its orchards in fine condition and the apple is an apple of gold for Wenatchee, a first foundation of prosperity; but orchards in Wenatchee are not all. North Yakima has this year sent out 131 cars of cherries, as against 75 last year, and received more than $100,000 for them, but the cherry is not all of agriculture at North Yakima. Diversified farming abounds in both communities, increases annually and lays the foundations of solid prosperity more widely and firmly every twelve months. The farmers have ceased to depend upon the single crop. They have learned the more excellent way. Even as orchardists, they do not confine themselves to one fruit. They cultivate many. As farmers they more and more expand the scope of production. The Yakima valleys for example, are great on hay, raising prodigious yields of this forage crop. The Wenatchee district goes strong on the grains and on cattle. The multiplication of different kinds of crops broadens the bases of prosperity and enriches the land.—Spokesman-Review.

OUR WILD TURKEY.

It Was the Progenitor of All Kinds of Turkey the World Over.

Among the aboriginal inhabitants of America the turkey was a favorite fowl. It had its habitat over all that section where grew its favorite food, Indian corn. When Cortes in 1519 first reached the realm of the Aztecs, Montezuma entertained him with royal splendor, and among the delicious viands set before the Spanish invaders was roasted turkey. It was found that the Aztecs had domesticated the fowl to quite an extent and that it was also plentiful in its wild state.

North of the Rio Grande the bird was equally well known, and the adventurous Coronado found it among the cliff dwelling Indians and other tribes he met on his expedition through what is now Texas, Arizona and New Mexico. The Zuni Indians seem to have known of the turkey for centuries, and some of their earliest traditions deal with this interesting bird.

The wild turkey of America is without doubt the progenitor of all kinds of turkey the world over. Ornithologists in general accept the view that all turkeys have descended from the three forms known today as the North American, the Mexican and the Honduras (Ocellata) varieties. The bird found in certain forest regions of South America known as the curassow, although sometimes called the South American turkey, in reality belongs to a different family, and scientists hold that any real turkeys found in that continent are immigrants.

In the United States six standard varieties of the domesticated turkey are recognized and grown. These are the Bronze, Narragansett, Buff, Slate, White and the Black. The differences are chiefly in size and coloring.—Exchange.

CULLODEN MOOR.

The Last Battle Fought on the Soil of Great Britain.

The last battle fought on the soil of Great Britain took place in the middle of the eighteenth century.

While George II. of England was engaged in the war of the Austrian succession Charles Edward, who was called the Young Pretender, a grand son of King James II. of England, landed in Scotland and made two attempts to obtain the throne of his ancestors. He was victorious in the battle of Falkirk, but the Duke of Cumberland, son of George II., having been recalled from the continent to take command of the king's forces, the Pretender was entirely defeated at Culloden moor, a plain in Scotland, four miles from Inverness. This was the last battle fought on the island of Great Britain and took place April 16, 1746, and it was also the last attempt on the part of the Stuart family to recover the throne of Great Britain.

Charles Edward Stuart escaped to France after he had wandered for five months in the highlands, pursued by his enemies. He died in Rome Jan. 30, 1788. The Duke of Cumberland gave no quarter. The wounded were slain, and the jails of England were filled with prisoners, many of whom were executed. Among the latter number were Lords Balmerino, Kilmarnock and Lovat—Lovat being the last person who was beheaded in England.—Philadelphia Press.

Women Who Make Living Dearer. Woman's abusiveness of a shopping privilege adds tremendously to the cost of operating department stores, and places a needless burden upon every buyer. One of the large merchants of New York city is authority for the statement that 25 per cent of the articles sent out to charge patrons are returned, not occasionally, but habitually. We are not thinking of the woman who returns garments that have been worn and declares they have never been used. She belongs in a class by herself and demands special treatment. But the woman who orders goods sent home without considering whether she needs them or not ought to be amenable to reason.—Francis Frear in Leslie's.

Suffocated.

To the grouchy looking person who had boarded his car the conductor said as he returned him his transfer: "This transfer expired ten minutes ago."

Whereupon, with a growl, the man dug for a nickel and as he handed it to the conductor observed: "No wonder, with not a single ventilator open in the whole car."—Harper's Magazine.

Mechanical Bread Raiser. "Oh, dear," groaned the young wife, "I don't know what to use to raise my bread. I've tried everything." "A derrick and a couple of jack-screws ought to do it," thought her husband, but he didn't say it aloud.—Boston Transcript.

Nobleman, Probably. Howell—I see that the heiress has put her money into the lumber business. Powell—That so? Howell—Yes, she has married a wooden man.
