O. N. BELL GIVES NEWS OF FRISCO CONVENTION

O. N. Bell returned Thursday evening from a trip that embraced Seattle, Portland, San Francisco, Berkeley and neighboring cities. "I had a fine trip," he said.

"The nomination of Cox was due to a reaction against the leadership of the adherents of Wilson, who at the opening of the convention attempted to dominate the party. Cox is a good man. Both while in San Francisco and on my way home, I met and talked with delegates and others accompanying them who came from Cox's home town and country.

If you are interested in an iron-clad dividend paying Texas oil investment, see R. A. David, Hotel Lee.—adv.

CHAN. ST. CLAIR RAISES TOBACCO, FLOWERS, ETC.

"Yes, indeed, you can raise good tobacco here. The trouble is that people in this part of the country don't know how to cure it. That is why I couldn't get rid of the young plants last spring. Tobacco should be hung up to dry, or be put through a sweat in an open shed. Those in the south resemble large hay barns without sides. Tobacco cannot be hung in the direct sunlight because the goodness will all be burned out. After it is dry, it can be cured with sugar, molasses or syrups. Old woodmen of the south bore a hole in a mable log and drive it full of tobacco, adding syrup. When cured, it comes out in round chunks."

Mr. St. Clair did not confine himself to tobacco plants this spring, however. He sold 100,000 tomato, cauliflower, cabbage, celery, pepper, and egg plants this last spring. Chauncey St. Clair, or "Chan" as he is more familiarly known, came to Colville in 1898. He was a building contractor for ten years, and put up many of the best known buildings in the town, the Lee hotel being one of them. About 5 years ago, after being for a time in the confectionery business and later running a pool hall, he moved into the building where Grover Graham's drug store is now located. Here he had a confectionery store. In connection with this business he ordered a great many flowers from Spokane for weddings, funerals and other occasions. It occurred to him that he might build up a profitable greenhouse business. In 1918 he built his first greenhouse and in 1919 another. Last December, he sold out his confectionery business and confined his attention to his growing plants. This fall he will put in a third greenhouse, and will then have 4000 feet in glass.

"I should have 13,000 feet of roof glass to handle the Colville trade," he said. "I should like to build two greenhouses 30x150. But I must go a little bit more slowly than that. The framework of such a house, excluding glass, heating plant and benches, would cost me $2050. Such a greenhouse as those I mean eventually to have is so arranged that by turning a crank you can open the roof and sides for ventilation when the weather is warm."

Mr. St. Clair has been marketing cucumbers for four weeks. Lettuce he raises in the winter and spring, putting it in wherever he has any extra space. He marketed 500 pounds this spring. "It is a leaf lettuce," he said. "Head lettuce does not grow well in a hothouse because it is likely to mildew. Our head lettuce comes from places where it can be grown out of doors. When the warm weather fails in Lewiston and thereabouts, we begin to get lettuce heads from California."

For his winter crop of flowers, Mr. St. Clair raises carnations, chrysanthemums and sweet peas. The asters, a summer crop, are almost ready. The second house is devoted almost entirely to carnations, a little space only being reserved for sweet peas and chrysanthemums. Last year there were 400 carnation plants. This year there will be 800, which will furnish enough for the local trade. Speaking of the chrysanthemums that are to keep the carnations company, Mr. St. Clair said: "Chrysanthemums are very susceptible to plant diseases. One is always fighting bugs in a greenhouse." Rust and mildew are forestalled by currents of warm, fresh air blown through the houses by an electric fan. Heat is furnished by a hot-air plant.

Midget Stores in the East. In the "souks," or markets, of Nablus, the modern Shechem, the city of the Samaritans, the stores are so small that the customer stands outside to examine the meager display of European and native Damascus wares. Here are rows of silversmith shops, where the artisans work cross-legged, producing from crude silver elaborate ornaments for the peasant women. Then there are the coffee shops, the street in front blockaded with men sitting on low stools, sipping the thick, hot beverage from tiny cups and smoking long red-piped, bubbling nargiles as they gossip and play a game of "tawia." There are also the sweetmeat vendors, from whose stalls produce into the street large trays of "kanafeh," the pastry dish for which Nablus is noted. The dish has a filling of fresh, sweet cheese, over which is poured melted butter and thick sirup until it is literally soaked with the mixture.

Independence of Georgia. The Georgians deserve to succeed, for their history shows them to be a plucky and a persevering people. Georgia's existence as an independent state goes far back into history. In fact, the annals of Georgia are older even than those of Greece and Rome, and Christianity was preached there in the fourth century. Although a victim to incessant attacks from the Persians and the Turks, who subjugated her provinces one by one, she succeeded not only in preserving her existence, but in retaining until 1801 a remnant of her political independence. Happily she is free again, for in May, 1918, the act of independence of Georgia was passed by the Georgian national council. Thus ended her connection with the Russian empire.—Christian Science Monitor.

Fire without matches may be produced with a handful of dry grass and two pieces of wood, one called the tinderwood, and the other a piece of very hard wood or very soft wood that is called the drill or spindle. A handful of dry grass is placed on a solid rock or board, and a notch is cut in the tinderwood. The tinderwood is then placed on the dry grass and the spindle is inserted in the notch in the tinderwood. The spindle is made to spin at a fast rate between the palms of the hands until a coal is produced. Then the dry grass is taken up in the hands and blown on to make a blaze. It is then dropped on the ground and dry twigs and other grass piled on. A much quicker method than using the palms of the hands is to have a bow with a leather thong stretched on it. The spindle is fixed with one turn around it and made to revolve very fast in the notch of the tinderwood.

Various Species of Asters. About 120 different species of asters are native in the United States and 54 of these are found in north-eastern America. All but a dozen are purple and blue and even botanists find it requires patient study to distinguish their many species. The New England aster is the most striking of the group. It has a stout, hardy stem, sometimes eight feet high, and large violet-purple and sometimes pinkish flowers, and is found in the swamps in the late summer. Great Britain claims only one native aster. Many American species are cultivated in English gardens under the name of Michaelmas daisies. The Swiss species is the most beautiful purple aster which is found in such quantities along the New England highways in the autumn, and which, with goldenrod, makes a radiant display of purple and gold.—Indianapolis News.
