One of our patrons is an auto enthusiast. "My savings account," said he, "is a shock-absorber that has carried me over the rough places and has made the going easier when times were difficult. It saves me from jars and enables me to go through life serenely.

"All the attention it needs is oiling regularly."

To all of which we say "Amen."

DAYS THAT HAVE PASSED

Days when the cave man swung a stone ax instead of a finely tempered steel weapon as we know it now.

Days when the pony express dashed over the plains carrying the mail, instead of the airplanes and fast trains as we have them.

Days when Uncle Phineas' old gray mare Dobbin shied at an automobile.

Days when mother toiled over a hot stove in summer—a smoky stove, a greasy stove, a stove that tired her completely out and spoiled the meal for her. Yes, yes, it was a good meal, but not to mother.

These are the days that are passed. A new day has come. Ask mother what she thinks of an electric range? What could you do that would lighten her load more than to get her a range? An electric range can be bought on the installment plan. Easy terms.

Step out of the days that are passed and enjoy the days that are here with all their wealth for you. You only live once in this old world.
