Awful Conditions That Now Prevail There.

BUSINESS AND CREDIT RUINED

Surviving Jewish Population Paralyzed With Fear—Another Massacre Expected.

New York.—News of present conditions at Kishineff has been received by the Jewish Daily News in a cable dispatch sent from that city. The dispatch says that credit and business are at a standstill and that those who, before the riots were beggars, are now starving. The news came from Dr. Muchnik in response to a request for information. It is dated May 19 and says:

"We are in receipt of your cables of inquiry. It is impossible to send answers to your questions at this time. The reason must be obvious. Order prevails in Kishineff. It is always quiet in a cemetery—for that is all that Kishineff is now.

"Rumors of new riots are flying everywhere but for the present, things are quiet. The result of this one riot is a terrible one for all the Jews of Russia. A financial crisis has come. Credit and confidence have ceased. Persons who have money have concealed it for the hour of emergency.

"Persons having goods, wares and merchandise do not permit them to pass out of their hands except for cash payments. Christians are not selling goods to us on credit for fear that new riots may impoverish us and make it impossible for us to pay. Jews are selling no goods to Christians for fear the latter will pay with a new riot. No new business is undertaken and old business is paralyzed.

"The result is that there is distress and poverty in the whole land such as was never before known. Wealthy men have become poor; poor men are now beggars and those who were beggars are now starving to death."

"The same newspaper also received today a letter sent to a prominent Jew in this city by his brother in Warsaw, which says in part:

"Here in Warsaw we expected a riot on May 3, and were prepared. All of our Jewish youth was armed, and even men up to the age of 45. We were organized and had squads at every corner. 'We had picked messengers in the telephone booths, and checked minute men in front of the churches. These minute men were young men armed with revolvers loaded with heavy cartridges. The streets swarmed with our young men—long life to them.

"So thoroughly armed and prepared were we that the tables were turned and the Christians feared to walk through the streets."

"When Lapouchin, the imperial chief of police of Kishineff asked a Jew if he could indicate who the bandits were the letter says this man answered: 'The governor, the chief of police, the colonel, the sergeants and the rest of your whole devil's crew.'

"Among the letters received today was one to the Jewish Herald from its correspondent in Buhuah, Roumania, telling how her little girl was killed. The woman escaped by hiding in a stall. She writes: 'They snatched my one-year-old girl from my arms. One took it by the leg, another by the other and tore it to shreds. I begged them to kill me. They caught up my boy, 8 years old, and chopped him to pieces.'

"The relief committee in Kishineff has called upon rich Jews the world over to adopt those orphaned there. In the name of religion, The Kievaka Review, published in Kieff, says that about 30,000 Jews of that city are preparing to come to America as soon as the city is quiet enough to insure the safety to families left behind.

The United States' Protest.
Chicago.—Walter Wellman in a Washington special to the Record-Herald, says:

"That there is precedent for representations to Russia by the United States concerning the Kishineff massacre is the interesting fact brought out today by Charles Emory Smith, former postmaster general and at one time minister to Russia. In 1891, says Mr. Smith, under conditions not altogether dissimilar from those of the present moment the American government did make representations to Russia. While there had been no such massacre as that of Kishineff there was a renewed and rigorous enforcement of obsolete and proscription edicts, the result of which was just such an emigration of Russian-Jews to America as that which is now under foot.

Under these circumstances the American minister at St. Petersburg held such communication with the Russian minister of foreign affairs as seemed fit. It was a diplomatic representation to the Russian government respecting measures within the Russian empire which conducted to excessive emigration to the United States. It was held that this emigration imposed burdens and produced conditions which directly affected the interests of our country and that on this ground we were justified in asking for the abandonment or the mitigation of the measures which led to such results. Naturally the subject had to be approached with discretion and within diplomatic proprieties, but there was a distinct representation in such form as caused its acceptance.

Mr. Smith adds this pertinent comment: "Secretary Hay's forcible dispatch respecting the oppression of the Roumanian Jews was based on the same grounds of the direct interest which this country had through the effect of the oppression on the influx of people unprepared for our requirements. It has been said that there is a distinction between the Roumanian case and the Russian case because in the former the American note was addressed to the signatories of the Berlin treaty, who were under pledges as to Roumania while in the case of Russia it would be a direct intrusion into the domestic affairs of the empire. But this distinction rests more on form than on substance. The fundamental basis of action is the same in both cases."
