JIM HILL'S PLANS

ARE OUTLINED

By the Wall Street Journal—Predicts Lower Freight Rates to Pacific Coast.

In an editorial on the Northern Securities and the policy underlying reductions of tariffs the Wall Street Journal makes some interesting comments upon the Hill methods. It says: "The amendments to the freight laws of Great Northern and Northern Pacific are not, in themselves, important. The articles affected are such as constitute at present the smallest proportion of the freight of the two roads."

"It is the policy that underlies the amendments that is of importance. The western roads have always found their east-bound tonnage heavier than their west-bound. The empty west-bound tonnage offends Mr. Hill. The fundamental principle of the amendments is that all cars must be full all the time when they are in motion. He has now advocated the reduction of rates on products of the west, with the ultimate intention of making it worth while for shippers southwest of St. Louis to send their traffic northwest to the ports of the north Pacific coast rather than the ports of the southern Pacific coast."

"The reduction of all freight rates between Chicago and the ports of the north Pacific coast is the ultimate purpose of J. J. Hill. His theory is that when the stocks of the companies engaged in that traffic are able to pay as high as 7 per cent they are paying as much as they should and that further profits belong to right to shippers and producers. He considers that efficiency of operation has not been reached its limit, and that therefore great room remains for the reduction of rate tariffs. In conversation about Northern Securities this is the point that he emphasizes more than others, namely that the operation of the corporation permits economies that cannot be put in force without it."

"Within two years Mr. Hill will have played on the north Pacific coast an additional tonnage equal to that now employed in the trans-Pacific trade from the ports served by the lines. This fact, taken in connection with the other obvious facts of the matter, leads to the conclusion that the possible exception of Canadian Pacific steamers out of Vancouver is being laid off in their current business as compared with previous years is worthy of much attention. Mr. Hill says that he is doing it because he has faith in the opening up of the coast both as a producer of tonnage for shipment this way and as a field for American commerce west-bound. The one without the other would not pay interest on Mr. Hill's investment in Pacific ships."

"The reduction in the rates on southwest product is merely a step in the policy that is to provide freight for these new ships out of American ports in Puget Sound. Mr. Hill intends to make it worth the while of shippers in all parts of the union except California to ship their goods to the coast through the northern ports, and through the lines of Northern Securities. The present step is but a beginning. Mr. Hill expects to secure reduction of the rates within the next few months. He expects also to secure a tonnage of raw cotton, which is not of nearly so much importance as that of manufactured goods. It is going to bill for every ton of tonnage that will fill a car, and the bill of the biggest ship will pay rates that will show profit to the transportation companies that receive it."

"The northwest may consequently look for other reductions in rates in the near future. The future annual receipts of Great Northern and Northern Pacific are likely to show decreases in ten-mile revenue, balanced by increases in volume of tonnage transported."

THE CENTURY FOR JUNE.

The June Century opens with an article, "The Sultan of Morocco Journeys Toward Fez," written and illustrated (in part in color) by Arthur Schnaeder, an American artist, who lived for fourteen months with the sultan, and who described in the May Century his efforts to teach his majesty drawing. It appears from this article that the sultan would gladly give up the old-fashioned ways of traveling in Morocco. He is anxious to have a railroad, but he knows that he cannot allow a European power to build one without exciting jealous rivals.

exchange man, describes the London stock exchange, with pictures by Andre Castaigne. The article is especially interesting in connection with the recent opening of the New York stock exchange. Howard Crosby Butler, author of the lately published book, "The Story of Athens," describes "The Land of Deserted Cities" in an account of the recent American expedition to northern-central Syria, and especially to regions where the civilization of Greece and Rome flourished, and where there are still fine monuments of classic art.

In the Century series on "The Great Northwest," Ray Stannard Baker describes the salmon fisheries, and Ernest Blumenschein illustrates them. Mr. Baker says that he started on his trip to the Columbia river fisheries with no very great enthusiasm, but found that the modern methods of fishing, instead of detracting from its picturesqueness, have added to its color, diversity, activity and peril, giving it a charm peculiarly its own. Hermann Klien's article on "Modern Musical Celebrities" gives reminiscences of many well-known people connected with the opera, including Sir Augustus Harris, Jean and Edouard de Reszke, Luigi Mancinelli, Nordica, Melba, Lasalle, Minnie Hauk and others. John Burroughs writes entertainingly on "The Ways of Nature;" Lillie Hamilton French, in her series on "My Old Maid's Corner," writes of "The Real Springtime for Me;" the Hon. L. F. C. Garvin, governor of Rhode Island, contributes an article on "The State Boss, and How He May Be Destroyed;" T. R. Dawley Jr., writes of "Stranded in a Spanish Hill Town;" and Elmer Gregory, author of the "Idlers" papers, in an article on "Unavailing Wealth," finds fault with the way the American rich man continues to work like a weary Sisyphus long after the need of honorable industry ends.

The fiction in the June Century includes an illustrated story of a boy and his dog, entitled "Chums," by Edwin L. Sabin, a sketch that will appeal to any man who, in boyhood, ever owned a dog. Other stories are by Abigail H. Fitch, Elizabeth Cherry Waltz and the Baroness von Hutten, author of "Our Lady of the Beeches."
