The Pilgrim for December. The Pilgrim for December shows a marked advance over previous issues of this popular and widely read magazine. While the contents generally cannot be said to relate specifically to Christmas, the Christmas spirit pervades the magazine from cover to cover. The leading illustrated article is one that will be read with decided interest, especially by those who have seen the seemingly peculiar actions of a certain little launch in the Detroit river. The article deals with the Marine postoffice at Detroit, which is unique in the United States postal service. The series of remarkable illustrations in drawings add to the interest in the article. In fiction the Christmas number of The Pilgrim is especially rich. A strikingly illustrated and swiftly interesting railroad story is entitled, "The Flight of 999", and Hopkins J. Moorehouse, its author, proves himself to be a writer of quite unusual power. The third of Mrs. Brangwin's little stories of human interest, entitled "All Ye That Labor", is especially suited to the Christmas number. A story for little tots, entitled "Tommy's Flight on Christmas Eve", is certain to be appreciated by the children after the stockings have been hung. The fourth part of "The Girl and the Deal" points to the denouement of this entertaining short serial, which will reach its conclusion in The Pilgrim for January. Never has The Pilgrim contained so many illustrations as in this Christmas issue, and among them all, doubtless the two studies of childhood by W. H. D. Koerner, will make the greatest appeal to the readers. The department of fashions and household hints are maintained at their usual high standard.

The December Pearson's. Pearson's Magazine for December presents the unusually numerous collection of six special articles and eight sparkling pieces of fiction. "The American House of Lords," by David S. Barry, is the leading article, and tells of the perquisites and sneers of United States senators; as they are to convene on the first Monday of December, this paper is peculiarly timely. A sketch of the philanthropic career of the late Louis Fleischmann relates the history and the death of his world-famous Bread Line, one of the night sights of New York. Still another timely article is H. P. Burchell's "International Athletics," copiously illustrated with photographs. In his story, Mr. Burchell briefly recounts the results of this year's American sporting achievements in competition with England, Canada, Germany and France. The article embraces everything from the defeat of Emperor William's Meteor to the victories of Americans over English track teams and cricket teams, and German bowling teams. Mrs. Kate V. St. Maur tells, in her "Self-Supporting Home," how to make money out of ducks and pigeons. Henry T. Parker has an interesting article on Gabrielle Rejane, the famous French actress who is here on an American starring tour. And F. B. Stevenson describes the "Bloodless Revolution of China," the land of the Far East whither all eyes are centered, watching the forging of history. Among the fiction numbers are two pretty love stories, three stories of adventure and the conclusion of Dr. Nicholas Stone, a detective story.

not depend upon occasional contributors whose sympathies and abilities may not precisely suit. They turn to trained investigators and tried authors: Ida M. Tarbell, Lincoln Steffens, Ray Stannard Baker, and Samuel Hopkins Adams. In early numbers of McClure's for 1905, Miss Tarbell will have some personal studies of the life and character of John D. Rockefeller. Lincoln Steffens will continue his brilliant articles on "Enemies of the Republics." Ray Stannard Baker will have a series of articles on "American Lawlessness." Samuel Hopkins Adams will write on "The Problems of Public Health." George Edward Woodberry will tell of "Great Masters of Literature;" John La Farge, the foremost American artist, will continue his articles on "One Hundred Masterpieces of Painting." William Allen White will describe the Grand Canyon; Chas. Wagner, author of the "Simple Life," so much admired by President Roosevelt, will tell what he thinks of America and Americans. Charles F. Lummis, the famous California editor, will tell the story of "Pioneer transportation." In fiction McClure's will continue to publish stories from the most prominent authors of the day. Great writers from the beginning have sent their work to McClure's.

Iowa Boy Sees Things Topsy Turvy. SIOUX CITY, Iowa, Dec. 12.—The world appears upside down to Paul Taylor, aged 8, of Lake Vjelm, Iowa. When he sees things he sees them standing on the wrong end. He writes from right to left and makes letters upside down. He is in good health and seems to suffer no inconvenience. The case is being discussed among members of the medical profession. "By constant training," said Dr. Geo. Park, "his condition can be cured just as by training a left-handed person can learn to write right-handed." J. W. Cookerly, licensed embalmer and undertaker, Babcock block, 7 1/2 First street. Tel. Main 379.
