WINTER IS COMING.

AS the leaves begin to fall it makes one wonder what he has done with his summer's wages. So accustomed have we become to this signal of approaching winter's grey and blustering weather that, in spite of our knowledge to the contrary, it continues to produce a feeling of dread in our minds and a chill runs down our back. Cold feet and hands, and frost bitten ears and nose are tenderly brought to mind. The farmer must begin to think of housing his stock and throwing down the hay out of the hay mow and the poor laborer will soon have to wear four overcoats to keep himself warm while he cuts wood to keep the fire burning in the grate at home. Jack Frost knocks at every door and window and to the poor he presents a most ugly and horrifying appearance. Poverty is terrible anywhere, but what can compare to it when cold winter is coming on?

But awake, dreamer! This is the state of Washington you live in now. No cold blasts will blow against your window pane. You will not have to get out and shovel snow off the walks this winter before going out to feed your stock. In fact, your stock will get the most of their living off the green hillsides. It may be that you can pick a bouquet of flowers from your garden to send back east as a Christmas gift to your friends. Yes, it rains a little once in a while out here but not, on an average, over one day in the week, and then you won't mind it near as bad as you imagine you will now if you have never passed a winter in Washington.

THE supreme court of the state has decided that the second choice of the primary law is constitutional, perhaps more because the people wanted it to be than because it really is. However, it is constitutional now that they have said the word. They are learned both in law and diplomacy, which is a pretty good combination at times.

IT looks good to see the hand of prosperity stretched over our valley and see on every hand the evidences of this prosperity. Lynden has grown more this summer than in two summers before. You cannot look in any direction but you will see a new building of some kind going up. In the city many fine residences have gone up this summer and in the surrounding country new homes and copious barns have taken the place of empty space or dilapidated ranchers' shanties. Several new school houses have been built in the near vicinity and a fine large church is now in the way of construction in Lynden. The Interurban Co. is looking for a franchise for its electric road from Bellingham and business is booming in the Gem City. Several new businesses have been started here, including a large department store.

ONE of the subjects that it would be well for the teachers of the county to discuss at the institute meetings next week, would be, "How to teach young America how to properly spend their money." We hear on every hand advice as to how to save money, but the great trouble with most young people and a few (?) old people is that they do not know how to spend their money.
