Very Sad to Her.

"I heard something very sad this morning," said a mistress to her servant, in explanation of her not feeling well, as the girl commented upon her mistress's appearance.

"Well," said the girl, "I can feel for you, ma'am. I heard something sad this morning too."

"You did?" said the mistress. "Pray, tell me, what was it?"
"The alarm clock, ma'am."—Ladies' Home Journal.

Sham Wisdom.
The Sophists were a body of teachers in ancient Athens during the fourth and fifth centuries B. C. who gave instruction in any or all of the higher branches of learning. Although they were not a philosophic sect and held no doctrines in common, the Sophists were nevertheless skeptics and maintained a belief of uncertainty of all particular knowledge and, in fact, in the impossibility of all truth. Their two leading representatives were Protagoras and Gorgias. The Sophists were charged with bringing reasoning into contempt by casting uncertainty over the most obvious truths and in consequence were ridiculed and denounced by Aristophanes, Socrates and Plato. Aristotle defined a Sophist as "a man who makes money by sham wisdom."

The Modest Scot.
Love of country is so fine a virtue that it seems difficult to carry it to excess. A resident of a small village in the north of Scotland paid a business visit to London and called on a merchant who, unknown to him, had once made a stay in his native place. In the course of conversation the visitor made use of an expression that led the other to exclaim, "Surely you come from Glen McLuskie?" The assertion, however, was denied. Presently, to the merchant's surprise, another Glen McLuskie expression was heard. "My dear Mr. MacTavish, I feel convinced that you are a Glen McLuskie man after all," insisted the merchant. "Weel," returned the other, "I'll no deny it any longer."
"Then why didn't you say so at first?" demanded the Englishman.
"Weel," was the calm response, "I didna like to boast o' it in London."—London Chronicle.

A Queen Made a Color Famous.
Marie Antoinette early in the summer of 1775 appeared before the king, her husband, in a lustrous dress of chestnut brown, and he remarked, laughing, "That puce color is delightfully becoming to you." Very soon all the court ladies had puce colored gowns, but the color not being universally becoming and less extravagant than light brilliant tints the fashion of puce colored toilets was adopted by the upper middle class more than by the nobility, and dyers could hardly fill their orders. The varying shades were given the most peculiar names, none of them attractive, "sea's back," "Paris mud" and "indiscreet tears" being the most eubonious.

We've Decided!

We've decided to hold prices down! If conditions were normal, we could sell our merchandise at the normal profit. Conditions are not normal—you know it, we know it everyone knows it—so we are going to continue selling many lines, until entirely closed out, at our Anniversary Price until January first. It is possible many of our good friends have had a little run of hard luck—pasture destroyed or something else—but, be that as it may, with winter on our threshold, it looks like nothing but common business sense for us to sell everything that we can in our lines of shoes, underwear, bedding, etc. at less profit—and we are not only going to—we're doing it! Don't ask us to cut the price lower than we have it now. We can't sell much cheaper and live ourselves.

WOMANKIND.

The little work tables of women's fingers are the playgrounds of women's fancies, and their knitting needles are fairy wands by which they transform the whole room into a spirit isle of dreams; hence it is that a letter or book distracts a woman in love more than four pair of stockings knit by herself.—Richter.

One woman is fair, yet I am well. Another is wise, yet I am well. Another virtuous, yet I am well. But till all graces be in one woman, one woman shall not come in my grace.—Shakespeare.

Very learned women are to be found in the same manner as female warriors, but they are seldom or ever inventors.—Vulturne.
