The Lynden Gimlet

Didja notice that money seems to be flowing like lager now in the sheriff's campaign, hie?

That page ad of apology for not being able to stop the cars bringing the booze from Canada, which appeared in the Herald last night, set somebody back $150. And all those letters being mailed out to every voter to show how bone-dry Mr. Callahan is, cost several hundred more.

That is, unless the sheriff is getting bargain rates on stamps from the government.

Never noticed before that any candidate from governor down had enough coin to spare to pay for postage, what?

If cash wins, look's like Lynden's neck.

Three cheers for John Barleycorn.

Rev. A. J. Brink nearly missed the big banquet, because he got the impression, that in harmony with the silver anniversary, W. H. Old was roasting a 25-year old ox.

The mule, however, was roasted.

Two enjoyable things marked the occasion for us. Bob Morrison spread mashed potatoes over our good looks. And T. R. Burns filled our hat with coffee.

We can hardly wait another twenty-five years for a grand banquet like that. Hasn't any other institution been here 25 years? Seems as if the City Drug Store ought to give us a glass of castoria, or something. And Marion Eichler also brags about how long he's been in business. How about opening up a keg of nails next Saturday, Marion?

WHO IS GETTING IT?

THE most important prosperity problem for the small community is summed up in the Department of Agriculture's recent estimate that city and farm prices are so far out of line that the farmer's purchasing power is a fourth less than in 1913.

This situation vitally affects the small town, for the small town is the link that connects farm and city. When the exchange of products between farm and city is not balanced, the small town is caught in a nutcracker.

Since the farmer's buying power is a fourth less than it was before the war, the natural question is, "Who's getting more than his share?"

There are a number of answers, dovetailing into each other.

The greatest trouble is the defect in the system of distribution, by which the city man pays sky-high prices for products that the farmer literally sells for a song. The rake-off or profit to the average commission man is far too big. In the same class are those city retailers who overcharge. In many cases, the retailer is the victim of high rents.

The single-taxers pick up the argument at this point and insist that rent is what is keeping production and distribution costs so high. To some extent, correct.

As far as manufacturing industry is concerned—that is, the production of city-made products bought by the farmer—it, with relatively few exceptions, is handicapped by over-capitalization. There have been too many stock dividends and too much floating of watered stock. Thus, a business that used to make $12,000 a year profit for 12 per cent on a capital of $100,000, now finds itself with $200,000 capital and is trying to earn the same old 12 per cent—which totals $24,000 on the new capitalization.

When price deflation is finished, some way will have to be found to deflate the over-capitalization of industry. The traffic can bear only so much, then it is bound to crack.

The farmer is not the deep sea, the deep sea. He is not only not getting enough for his products, but he also is paying too much for what he has to buy. Like all big problems, it will be taken care of by time.

Mothers Weep at Unveiling of Memorial to Baby Dead

THESE mothers are gathered at the dedication, in Central Park, New York, of a monument to the little children killed in the great city, most of them traffic mishaps. All those in the group have themselves experienced such tragedies, some very recently, and many of them, as can be seen, are in tears as the dedication ceremony brings their bereavement freshly to their minds.
