PERRIN'S PILE SPECIFIC

Communicated.

COLFAX, April 3, 1903.
Editor of the HERALD.—In your issue of last week, under the head of "It Was Grangers' Day," you say that Mr. Jones, the grand master of the National Grange, stated that "in 1850 the total wealth of the United States was $8,500,000,000, of which $5,300,000,000 represented the wealth of the farmers, which was 62 per cent. of the wealth of the nation, and that in 1900, fifty years later, the total wealth had increased to $94,000,000,000, and the farmers owned 70 per cent. of this."

There must be some mistake in this, and I believe you have misquoted Mr. Jones on the subject, because the census of 1900 gives the total wealth of the farmers of the United States at $20,514,001,831, which would be about 21 per cent of ninety-four billion dollars.

From your report it would appear that the farmers of the United States are the most prosperous class of people that we have, and if the figures quoted are true, I can see no reason for the organization known as the Grange, which I understand is for the purpose of bettering the farmer's condition, and if he has made such progress as indicated without the Grange, he had better let well enough alone. But it is because the true figures show a different condition of affairs that makes the Grange a necessity to educate the farmer, so that he may study for himself the laws of economics which control him and have reduced him to a condition which is indeed deplorable.

The census of 1900 gives the total number of farmers to be 4,639,657, who have and operate a total of 841,201,546 acres. Of this number of acres, since 1866, or in a period of 33 years, there have been taken under the land laws of the United States 251,248,180 acres.

The average value per acre of the farms in the United States without improvements is $11.75.

Now, if the farmers in 1850 owned $5,000,000,000 of the wealth of the nation in 50 years they have made a gain of $15,200,000,000, but of this sum three billion dollars have been derived from the development of new land, and perhaps there has been added a similar amount on account of the increased value of all farm lands, but this latter amount I have not the figures for, and therefore will not consider it, nor will I consider farm mortgage indebtedness, which should be deducted.

Deducting the five billion dollars that they owned 50 years ago, and also the three billion dollars added by reclaiming government land, and we have a result of twelve billions of increase in 50 years. Assuming that during these 50 years there have been an average of three million farmers, then by dividing twelve billion dollars by three million we have a net gain per farmer of $4000, which divided by 50 gives a net gain of $80 per farmer per annum, over and above the actual maintenance of himself and his family, as the result of his labor, on his capital, which amounted to $4000.

There never was a time when a man who has had as constant employment as the farmer has, and and who has worked as many hours as the farmer has worked and who had no capital except his labor power which he sold for a daily wage, and who practiced the same economy which the farmer has been compelled to practice in the past 50 years, who could not have saved as much, if not more, than the farmer has.

From this it seems clear to me that the farmer has not received for his labor all that his labor has produced; and as the Grange is organized for the purpose of study and investigation, it would seem to me that he would be very much interested in the question of how others got from the farmer that which he produced without returning to him an equivalent.

When they have solved this question, it will then be easy to devise a method by which the cause of such exploitation may be removed and the farmer receive, as he ought, the full product of his labor.
Respectfully yours,
THOMAS NEILL.
