

OVER 140 LIVES LOST PACIFIC COAST STEAMER VALENCIA WRECKED; FEW ESCAPED.

Was on Way From San Francisco to
Puget Sound—During Heavy Fog
Valencia Run on a Rock, Making a Great Hole—She Filled Rapidly and a Heavy Sea Consumed All.

Victoria, Jan. 24.—With 94 passengers and about 60 in her crew the steamer Valencia went ashore about 10 miles east of Cape Beale in a thick fog about 12 o'clock Monday night. She is on the rocks against a high cliff and is likely to go to pieces at any time. One boat's crew of six men reached Cape Beale about 3 p. m. Tuesday.

The survivors say that a great number were drowned in trying to leave the ship. Some reports say 100 lives are lost. Nine men got ashore about 15 miles from here. Two men are prisoners on the face of the cliff and can not get up or back to the ship. The sea will likely reach them when the tide is high.

The men report very pathetic scenes. One woman dropped her child in the sea in trying to hand it to her husband. A little boy of 5 years is running around the deck trying to find his mother who is among the drowned.

There are still about 125 persons on the ship, with almost certain death staring them in the face. The steamer Queen has left for the wreck.

Cape Beale is on Vancouver island at the southern side of the entrance to Barclay sound.

When the steamer Valencia left San Francisco at 11 a. m., Saturday, the weather was clear, but since has been thick, and Captain Johnson had consequently to navigate by reckoning. The officers of the steamer thought they were near the Umatilla reef lightship, when the vessel drove in on the Vancouver island coast.

Soundings had been taken, 30 fathoms having been secured a few minutes before the vessel struck. When she hit the rocks her engines were reversed, and the steamer succeeded in backing off into deep water. She immediately began to fill, so quickly that the engineers and firemen were driven from the engine room, and the only chance to save the life of anyone on board was to drive the vessel ashore.

When the six survivors who have arrived at Cape Beale left the Valencia was head on to the sea and was about 30 yards from the high bluff on shore, with the water over her main deck.

What were left of her passengers, a large number having been previously drowned, were huddled on the saloon deck.

When the boats were lowered soon after the vessel was driven into the shore she began to fill, and there was great loss of life. The boats, filled with women and children, were smashed against the side of the steamer, and all in them were lost. The lights had gone out by this time, and the crew could not see to work. Several boats and three rafts were lowered. Only two of them have been heard from.

There are thought to be about 100 persons still on the wreck, and the survivors who reached Cape Beale say at least 50 were drowned alongside the steamer before they left. The boatswain and five seamen were sent to secure assistance, and are the only ones to reach Cape Beale. The steamer Queen City passed the wreck without sighting her. The weather was thick at the time.

Later Report.

Of the 154 persons on board the steamer Valencia when she struck near Klamath rock, five miles from Cape Beale, but 15 were saved. Seven passengers and eight were members of the crew. The dead number 139, the greatest loss of life in the north Pacific since the "Pacific" was lost in 1875. The Valencia, in whose rigging about 30 persons were clinging frantically waving for assistance, which could not be given when the steamer Queen left the scene at 11:30 a. m., broke up about 5 p. m. Wednesday, sweeping to death those few who had survived these terrible hours of privation, chilled and numbed to the limit of human endurance by clouds of spray which swept over them. The tug Lorne, which Mayor Morley of Victoria sent at 11 o'clock Wednesday after the sad news was brought by the Queen of the partially submerged vessel and the bluejackets who went on her by order of Captain Parry of the H. M. S. Egeria with surf boats to endeavor to reach the wreck, will arrive too late, as the sea had claimed all before the Queen reached Victoria.

The steamer Queen, which arrived at 6 o'clock Wednesday night from the scene of the wreck of the Valencia, reports that when the Queen left the wreck at 11:30 Wednesday morning, being relieved by the steamer City of Topeka, from Seattle, there was still from 20 to 30 persons clinging to the rigging of the aftmast, the fore part of the steamer being submerged. The steamer lay broadside against the shore. By 1:30 p. m., when the tide would be at its flood, it was expected the greater part of the hull would be submerged. With the heavy southwest sea then running the afterhouses would without doubt be washed away with the rigging, in which the few remaining survivors were still clinging, frantically signaling for assistance. The only hope when the Queen left was that a rescue could be effected with ladders from land, or, if the sea should go down and the unfortunate still survive, rescues might be made from smaller tug, which could approach closer to the wreck than the tug Czar, which tried vainly Wednesday to reach the passengers.

The sight of those who thronged the rigging and waved signals to the steamer was heartrending. Nothing could be done; the Queen could not approach closer than half a mile, and to lower boats in the heavy sea would have been madness.

The tug Czar ran toward the wreck, then in a haze, and returned, not having seen any one on board. The Queen reported the existence of the survivors in the rigging, but the message probably was not understood, for soon afterward the tug left, and with the steamer Salvor proceeded around Cape Beale toward Bamfield.

The sea rolled high. There was a strong wind, about 20 miles an hour, blowing from the east, seas at times washing over the tug Czar, which rolled heavily. The Queen stood off until half an hour after the steamer City of Topeka arrived from Seattle with Captain Patterson, port captain, and Navigating Agent Pharoah of the Pacific Coast Steamship company on board, who ordered Captain Cousins back to Victoria immediately to continue his voyage to San Francisco, asking him to report to the city of Topeka, en route outward.

MAY GIVE IRELAND PARLIAMENT Event Foreshadowed by Liberal Victory in Britain.

One of the most prominent politicians in England, speaking of the tremendous victory of the liberal party, said to the Associated Press:

"It is useless to minimize the present revolution and we might as well begin to take a new view of the situation. In my opinion a parliament sitting in Dublin may be looked for within the next two years. Assuredly John Redmond, leader of the nationalist party, and Prime Minister Campbell-Bannerman have reached a working agreement, and it is inconceivable that Mr. Redmond would be content with anything less than an Irish parliament. I have no idea that such a parliament would mean separation, and have good reasons to believe that a plan is now under consideration by which the religious question can be eliminated from the deliberations of such a parliament, which would act under the imperial parliament and at least try the experiment of administering Irish affairs under the conditions which have changed in the last century."

Within the last eight days the political complexion of the United Kingdom has been changed by the tide of liberalism, which even now is higher than the most sanguine radical dared hope for. The new parliament will be overwhelmingly liberal. Up to this time the total number of members elected is 480, of whom 247 are liberals, 114 unionists, 40 laborites, 78 nationalists and one socialist. This leaves 190 seats still vacant.

The liberals thus far have gained no less than 177 seats, counting labor gains as liberal or government gains, and if the same proportion is kept up for the remaining 190 seats the liberals will have 407 votes in the next parliament, to which may be added those of 42 laborites, one socialist and 53 nationalists, which would give Prime Minister Campbell-Bannerman 533 votes against 137 for the conservatives.

Wondrous Changes in 10 Years.

Wondrous changes have come to the Northern Pacific company in the past decade. It earned last year, according to its official statement to Olympia, nearly as much in Washington state as it was earning 10 years ago on the entire system.

Its gross earnings for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1895, on the entire system in Minnesota, Dakota, Montana, Idaho, Washington and Oregon, were about $18,000,000; and after it had paid operating expenses, there remained for interest on the bonded debt only $6,115,298, a sum falling short of interest requirements by about $3,000,000.

According to the company's report, just submitted to the state railroad commission, it earned in this state alone last year over $14,000,000.

WHEAT CROPS OF WORLD.

Great Britain's Prospects Not Out of Ordinary—Yield in Roumania Will Be Short.

The foreign crop report for December shows that over large areas of Europe the prevailing characteristics were unseasonably warm weather and excessive humidity. Crops lightly sown have germinated finely and entered on the winter in strong, healthy condition. Late sowing of crops in Europe, however, were unusually extensive and some anxiety is felt concerning them.

In Great Britain the winter wheat area has been extended. The acreage, however, is still believed to be diminished, as compared with last year. The growing crops have an improved appearance.

In France the wheat area is the average. In Germany weather conditions were unfavorable and there was no marked improvement. In Roumania the area under wheat is about 15 per cent short of last year. The 1905 crop is now estimated at from 50,000,000 to 55,000,000 bushels. The bulk of it is said to be out of condition, hence no export movement to the north of Europe points is expected until spring.

No important definite news regarding the conditions of winter sown cereals in Russia are reaching the outside world.
