THE RURAL CHURCH

For many generations the country church was a characteristic and important part of the American soil organization. The "meeting house" stood alone in the open country in solemn isolation, usually a graveyard nearby, often a grove and a spring adding to the comfort and beauty of this religious "center." Hither on Sundays came the farmers and their families in farm wagons or spring wagons or on horseback to attend the two daylight services with an "intermission" between, at which the quiet lunch would be consumed and converse would be held in quiet Sabbath voice as to the welfare or sickness of every family of the country side. Often a stroll would be taken through the "graveyard" to read the inscriptions, and the reminders of the brevity of human life here and an immortality hereafter engraved upon the tombstones. The country church formed the corporate center of the neighborhood. Here the ceremonies attending birth, death and marriage, those most solemn facts of society, were solemnized. The educational and purely social events of the neighborhood were secondary to the dominant note of the religious life. These industrious, frugal, slow-moving, God-fearing people, who formed the social unit of the country church were for many generations one of the most striking characteristics of American life.

Now, we are told, the country church has perished or decayed in the regions where it was once dominant. The moving of the retired farmers to the town, the influx of foreigners from every quarter of Europe, the sub-divisions of sects has almost eliminated this ancient and worthy institution. Neither "social centers" nor Granges, nor Unions, nor literary societies, nor consolidated school can take its place. The absence of the spiritual guidance of the minister, of the study of the Bible, of the spirit of worship and of the regular formal service is not counterbalanced by any or all of the newer forms of social organization. In the west and northwest the country church never developed. Bachelor farmers, mammoth farms, "get-rich-quick" methods in farming, the desire to make a "stake" and get back to "God's country" have made it possible the conditions of slow and permanent development under which the country church arose and flourished, to say nothing of the lack of a background of religious conviction in the settlers.

The nearest approach to the country church here in the northwest is the town church. Our towns, after all, are rural towns. They have none of the characteristics of the real city. Our country bankers are far more deeply interested in lands and crops and live stock than in stocks and bonds and merchandise. Our arti-keepers are keepers of country sans serve the country. Our storekeepers. Even our citizens mostly own or operate farms. All the problems are rural problems. With the advent of the automobile, the possible radius of attendance on church and Sunday school is extended 10 miles beyond the town limits. To those who believe in the religious life as a great force in human society this new phase of the subject and the possibilities of the town church as a country church should commend study.

TAKE THE GARDEN CURE

"Hoe handle medicine" is about the best remedy that can be prescribed this time of the year for three-fourths of all the common ailments. It would prove beneficial to chronic grouchiness and spring fever, and no less effective for sluggish livers, poor appetites, after-effects of colds, gripes, and the general rundown condition in which winter usually leaves the body.

It is said that in one's back yard—garden—lies the solution of one's own peculiar problems. In other words, worry, in all its various forms, when taken to the garden, vanishes in the open air and sunshine. The "garden cure" is especially recommended for that mental and physical condition so characteristic of spring, that makes you feel that you are only half alive; that tired feeling that patent medicine sellers have been so successful in appealing to, that makes the spring time their golden harvest time.

Tonics and teas that our grandmothers used to give for this condition had at least one virtue—they were harmless. The majority of cures that have replaced the herb brew and root tea contain either alcohol or opiates, but probably their worst fault is that they raise false hopes, and waste precious time and get hard earned money on false claims.

However, the day of the patent medicine fakery is believed to be about over and disease and health are coming to be dealt with through honest practical methods.

The "garden cure" has a number of features to recommend it, and its most valuable, perhaps, is exercise in the open air and the time spent in the sunshine. Then there is the "garden sass" that is grown, that is the best spring tonic, especially when included in the daily bill-of-fare. Early spring greens and garden vegetables and less of meats and heavy foods will go a long way towards avoiding spring fever and that "rundown" feeling.

STATE FEDERATION OF WOMEN'S CLUBS

Mrs. Solon Shedd, President

We are pleased to print the following letter from Hon. I. M. Howell, secretary of state, and earnestly urge the club women to co-operate to make the "National Honest Weights and Measures Week" a real benefit to every community in our state.

"The merchants' associations have been requested to take part in the program during this week, and many have signified their intention to place placards in their windows, setting forth the fact that they use only honest and legitimate weights and measures, and that they are ready and willing to co-operate with the consumer in stamping out the evil of careless and dishonest weights and measures.

The ministers of the state have also been requested to co-operate and to deliver sermons on the subject of "Honest Weights and Measures" on Sunday, June 18. The Bible is so full of texts and every-day life of modern instances that a very masterful sermon can readily be made.

"National Honest Weights and Measures Week" can not be made to reach its maximum success, however, without the co-operation of the housewife. She must represent to a very large extent the consumer who desires to obtain honest weights and measures.

Weights and measures touch the home in that vulnerable spot, the pocketbook. Point out to the women the necessity of watching their purchases so that it will not have to be, as Mrs. Ballard, president of the Women's Civic club of Crawfordsville, Ind., told the sealers in convention at Indianapolis last month, "that the women were so grossly incompetent and unscientific in their purchases, the men were forced to legislate for honest weights and measures in self defense." Then see that the merchants display in their windows placards showing their eagerness to treat their customers fairly by giving full measure, and their desire to give competent service to all who trade with them.

To this end we urge the women's clubs to champion the cause—for it is certainly a worthy one—and without their support it could not possibly be anything but a one-sided affair.

Make a personal appeal to the merchants of your locality, enjoining upon them their obligation to observe this occasion and thereby assist in the eradication of the evil. Any legitimate merchant is bound to be enthusiastic over such an event, and if any are found who are not, make them tell why not. No public spirited dealer can neglect the observance of such a great public benefit.

Call upon the county auditor, who is ex-officio sealer of weights and measures for your county, and express your desire to co-operate to make this week a success. Also see the mayor, and the editor of the newspapers and find out what part they are willing to play in the role.

In some cities one of the biggest features of the week will be a parade in which all the women are urged to take part, and express their desire, on the part of the consumer and the housewife, for honest weights and measures. To this end the women and children are especially invited to display banners and badges with appropriate legends on the subject of honest weights and measures.

In some cases, on account of other parades during the same week, it will be impossible to carry out this program, and in this instance those who are unable to take part in the parade are urged to display in the windows of their homes similar legends on cards which you will probably be able to procure from the merchants associations in your community.

I am satisfied that the great importance of the proper exploitation of a week of this character in the state of Washington will at once appeal to club women as one of the most desirable means of properly bringing forcibly to the attention of every citizen the importance of the work of the weights and measures department.
