

WITH AUTUMN IN THE AIR,
NEW CLOTHES EVERYWHERE

The New Materials Are Unsurpassed
In Softness and Texture—Quilting
a New Trimming Idea

With the bright, crisp October days here, New York seems more alive than ever, and the fashionable thoroughfares of the great city are filled with crowds in new attire which is exceedingly smart. Everyone wants new clothes when autumn comes, and everyone seems to have new clothes.

The long top coats and one-piece dresses which are worn under them, strike one as being of most importance this season, though tailored suits are also well represented. The coats look so warm and comfortable with their large, high collars that button snugly to the neck. Many of the collars are made of fur or fur cloth, which may be had in such good imitations that only a very experienced eye could tell the difference. The materials for coats this season are simply irresistible; so beautiful are they in the rich, warm colors and so wonderfully soft in texture. Without being heavy or clumsy, they are warm enough for the cool weather.

Among the very newest materials are Bolivia cloth, a rich fabric with a sheen; and burella, a soft open weave somewhat like homespun, but very much more attractive and finer in quality. In addition to these, there are the well known wool velours, wool plushes and wool velvets as well as many other fancy coatings. A pleasing note in the development of the new coats for fall is the use of bright colored linings. A very handsome imported coat of navy blue serge had a bright cerise lining which showed when the fronts were rolled open. Glimpses of it were also seen in the lining of the collar and cuffs. Other charming combinations that have been seen in the way of linings, are brown with light blue, and black with cerise.

Like the coat in the illustration, a great many models show the straight closing down the front with gracefully curved lines at the sides. The back and sides are belted. Some models, however, are, on the contrary, very full at the back and have no belt at all to confine the fullness which starts at the neck and increases as the coat lengthens. Fur collars are particularly good style this fall. Hudson seal, beaver, kolinsky, fitch, skunk and rabbit are the pelts most used. Very often the cuffs are of matching fur, too, but in many instances only the collar is of fur.

Quilting a New Idea

A very novel idea that has been brought from Paris is the quilted effect on suits; and even waists have been made in this style. The quilting is done by machine-stitching in pretty designs rather than in straight lines, and the effect is so different from anything else that it has been very much admired. Satin and silk suits are made with deep bands of quilting at the edges of both skirts and coats. Another way of using the quilting idea is in touches on collar, pockets and cuffs. Some quilted waists have been further decorated with French knots in heavy yarn. Some of these waists are intended especially for sports.

Handsome One-Piece Dresses
One-piece dresses are so very popular that they are used for all occasions and developed in widely varied materials to suit the different occasions. A dress for shopping and the practical issues of life is the one shown here, developed in serge and trimmed with rows of braid in different widths. It buttons trimly down the front from collar to hem.

One-Piece Dress of Serge, Braid-Trimmed

From Paquin comes an exquisite one-piece dress of brown Georgette crepe to be slipped on over the head. It is trimmed with dull gold embroidery. The skirt is quite long and weighted with a deep band of beaver fur. A high beaver collar and deep cuffs of the same finish the neck and sleeves, while the front has a soft blue velvet vest and a touch of the same velvet appears on the loose girdle of Georgette which is arranged below the normal waistline. Another charming one-piece frock was of light blue chiffon velvet with skirt gathered to a long body. Narrow gold braid trimmed the body, and the skirt had two wide strips of gold braid hanging at either side over the hips.

EXPERTS FILE PREDICTIONS

STATE COLLEGE, Pullman, October 16, 1916.—Walter Hogan, originator of the "Hogan System" of predicting the egg laying ability of hens, and Oscar Nelson, poultry judge, finished their work at the State College of Washington last week, and have left behind them with Mrs. Helen Dow Whitaker of the State College, who is directing the great All-Northwest Egg Laying Contest, which began yesterday, statistics on each of the 1200 competing hens. Duplicates of these lists—one for each bird—have been sent to every owner.

On the slips filed by Mr. Hogan appear two estimates—one, the lay of the hen when in practically perfect condition; the other, the lay of the bird if continuing in the same condition as when examined. Both sets of figures are for the lay of one year—from October 15, 1916, to October 15, 1917—the time set for the contest to run.

On the slips filed by Mr. Nelson is a judgment of the bird as a specimen, without regard to her possible egg laying ability. As to whether the best birds are the best layers, this contest may largely help to determine.

Some surprising results may be expected if Mr. Hogan's predictions come true, as he anticipates great reversals in form in the case of some of the flocks which produced high pens in the great Missouri, Panama-Pacific, and Victoria Egg Laying Contests. Some of the flocks most carefully "Hoganized" by disciples of the Hogan System, win scant approval, according to the figures predicted for their lay by the master.

His estimates vary from a minimum of zero to a possible maximum of 265 eggs for the year's lay of any one hen, and the previous record of the bird does not enter at all into his calculations. With fifty-five years' experience in the breeding of poultry, he forms his own judgments confidently and is convinced that the results of the year's contest will only establish more firmly than ever, the trustworthiness of the Hogan System.

One of the biggest features of the military year at the State College of Washington will be the assignment of Lieutenant Scott, coast artillery to corps, with six or seven sergeants, to duty at the college. These men will assist Captain Osterman and the object of the military training will be to enable cadets to report to active duty in time of war. Officers will be instructed in commanding bodies of men, and privates will be shown how to obey the commands in the regular manner. The lack of discipline, due to the inability of students to see the object of military training will be a mistake that the new men will correct.
