STILL AFTER ROAD

The chamber of commerce is still hot on the trail of a new west approach to Pullman and at its meeting Tuesday authorized the roads committee of the organization to make arrangements for the visit of a large delegation of Pullman citizens and farmers residing near Pullman to the county commissioners in the near future for the purpose of impressing the necessity of the new road upon the county heads. O. L. Waller, W. L. Greenawalt and D. F. Staley were named a committee to secure a complete survey of the proposed new approach, leading from the I. O. O. F. cemetery to the O. W. R. & N. station, together with all necessary data, to present to the commissioners. Approximately one-fourth of the proposed road is outside the city limits and it is thought that county assistance can be secured. The granting of easement privileges by the railroad company precludes the necessity of making the expensive cut through the rock wall on State street, reducing the cost of the improvement to a point which makes the construction of the road a possibility.

RAINS DELAY SPRING WORK

Copious rains Wednesday night again delayed the spring farm work and some of the farmers are getting a little anxious over the continued poor weather. Probably 50 per cent or more of the spring seeding has been done and a day or two of fair weather will again put the ground in condition to receive the seed. Garden work also has been greatly delayed and a few of the gardens planted early in the season may have to be re-seeded, much of the seed having washed out. Old timers, however, recall the fact that some of the best crops ever raised in the Palouse country followed exceedingly late springs.

girls from his experience in the shoe business and mercantile business generally, stated that the rapid rise in the prices of footwear was not solely due to the scarcity of leather. Citing from authority, he said that the additional imports and accumulations of leather in 1916 over 1915 were sufficient to manufacture 60,000,000 pairs of shoes. He quoted Thos. G. Plant, founder of the largest ladies' shoe factory in the world, who is now buying shoes for the Belgian relief commission with the statement that "there is no good reason why shoes in 1916 should be practically double the price in 1915."

Illustrating one of the conditions which forces the price of shoes up, Mr. Sanders said: "It is not so much the high price of leather, but the changing styles and the many shades of leather demanded that are running the price of shoes so high. Some dealers are telegraphing for new styles as soon as announced and having them come by express, and almost before there is time to show them, something new is on the market and is being called for."

"The merchants are constantly being confronted with the fact that they have on hand a stock of shoes that are not selling because suddenly and without warning, they have gone out of style. This means that in order to remain solvent in his business he must add to the profits of the selling goods, knowing full well that very soon these selling shoes will be 'out of style' and must then be sold at a discount, probably below cost, or thrown away."

In presenting an analysis of superfluous costs incurred by 'style' in the textile industry, Miss Helen Goode, a student of the home economics department of the college, said:

"The large retailer postpones till the last moment his direct purchases from the cloth-makers. The makers of the cloth do scarcely any business in the early part of the season, having their mill staff in the fancy goods department idle, being afraid that 'the rush will come' any day. During the latter part of the season the mills are choked with orders. Neither condition is economical and the consumers pay for these attempts to adhere strictly to Paris-set fashions. Our duty as consumers should be to return to the saner purchasers of more conservative fabrics and to place less emphasis upon novelties, designs, garments, and fabrics."

Miss Virginia Weaver, another home economic student, said in the last talk of the afternoon that of the three reasons for dress, namely protection, modesty, and decoration, the latter was considered greatest among women; that decoration represented the primitive instinct for adornment known to modern times as fashion; and that it was because of fashion worship that merchants in their efforts to protect themselves against the cost of rapid changes of style, deliveries, salesmen, and extensive advertising, were constantly forced to charge higher prices for shorter-lived fabrics. She also gave three reasons why women should not follow fashion today: first, because our nation needs our time; second, because it needs our energy; and, third, because it needs our money. To effect these needs there must be secured a desirable and artistic standardization, based upon suitable materials, colors, lines, and styles.
